STORM ALERT
BE PREPARED

The National Weather Service is predicting up to 6 inches of rain in the coastal areas this coming weekend. If you know your area is prone to flooding, prepare and place sand bags now. We could see Pine Gulch Creek once again flood over its banks onto the Olema-Bolinas Road in the area of the school.

The Fire Department will only close a road when absolutely necessary, usually after cars start stalling when trying to drive through. If this occurs again, please understand and be patient.

Other low lying areas could flood as well. There are sandbags and sand at the firehouse for your use.

With the already saturated ground, trees could fall down bringing wires with them.

Take some time today to stock up on extra batteries, flashlights and warm blankets in the event that we have to go without power. Have extra food and drinking water available. Be very careful about driving through flooded areas. If in doubt, don't do it.

As always, feel free to call the firehouse at 868-1566 with any questions or concerns and don't hesitate to call 911 if you think you need to. We are here to help.

PLEASE READ: IMPORTANT NOTICE TO ALL CUSTOMERS OF THE BCPUD SEWER SYSTEM!

We are issuing this notice to all customers of the sewer system to request that you please check your property to determine whether any of your roof gutters and/or sump pumps are connected to the BCPUD's sewer system and, if so, please disconnect them immediately. In addition, please check to ensure your sewer lateral clean-out is properly capped. The BCPUD sewer system is not a combined sewer/storm water system and our facilities are not designed to handle storm water flows in addition to sewage flows. The BCPUD is experiencing a considerable increase in the volume of flows into the sewer system correlating with rain events. Our ongoing investigation into the increased flows suggests that customers may have connected roof gutters and/or sump pumps into the sewer system, or may have open/uncapped cleanouts. BCPUD staff requests that all customers to please disconnect these systems as soon as possible, particularly in light of the forecasted heavy rains. If you have any questions or need assistance, please contact the BCPUD at (415) 868-1224.

BUILDING FOR LIFE

License #946778 - fully insured and bonded

As a musician, I've had a hard time negotiating my response to this most recent political assault on our earth and society. Lately it feels frivolous to strum a guitar or play with a turn of phrase, knowing that others are on the front lines of real peaceful resistance, boots on the ground, ice in their hair, gumming up the machinery of ecological destruction.

Last month, while sitting at the pipe ceremony at the BCC, I un-expectedly got over-whelmed, viscerally feeling the waves of prayer, rolling out from our hearts, and through my body. That afternoon we all heard the cautiously optimistic news that the DAPL was being relocated. For a brief moment the power of prayer seemed evident, even as we recognized that the larger fight for earth justice is just beginning, both in the Dakotas and across the globe.

Meanwhile, that same day, horrifying reports of the Ghost Ship warehouse fire in Oakland were just coming out. Dozens of our colleagues in the Bay Area underground arts scene had died.

Anyways, point being: it was an intense day with a lot of different emotions swirling around.

That night, Charlie, Alex, Ryan and I set up our gear, letting go into the catharsis of loud rock and roll. We came up with this song, "waves of prayer" and I wanted to share it with you.

You can listen and download the song for free, here:

jeffreymanson.bandcamp.com/track/waves-of-prayer

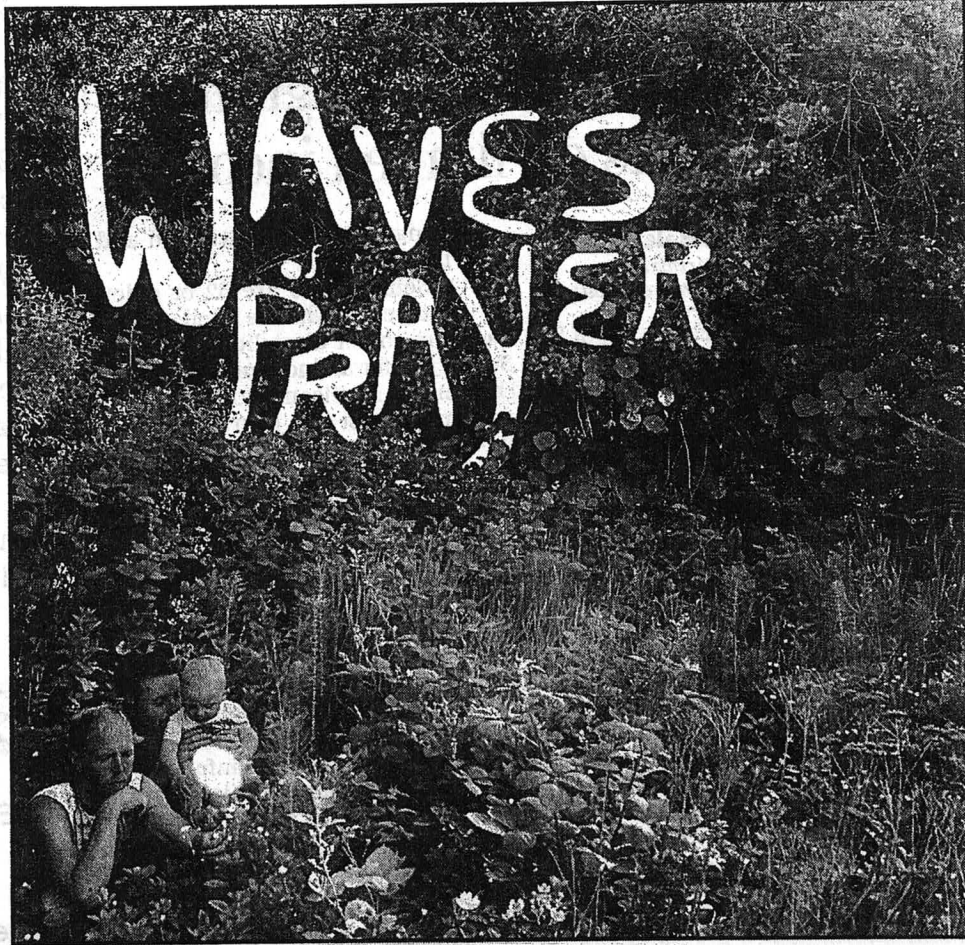

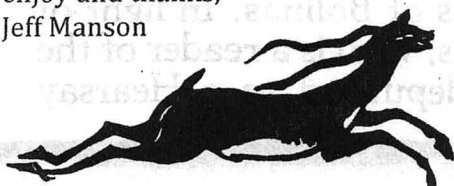

Our friend Michael Lerner recently wrote, in the New School at Commonweal's newsletter;

"In a multi-colored world, white supremacy cannot be a majoritarian vision. Sexism cannot be majoritarian. Leadership dominated by multinational corporations cannot be majoritarian. An anti-science, post-truth vision cannot be majoritarian. Growing income disparities cannot be majoritarian..."

For those of us who cherish the vision of a democratic, just, and sustainable world, the grief is enormous. But, quietly, the wave of resistance is beginning to take form.. "

I feel you right there, rolling on a wave of prayer, pouring sand in the gas tank, gumming the machinery up.

enjoy and thanks,
Jeff Manson

PROPERTY TAX ISSUES? State reinstates program for residents on limited incomes

By Richard Halstead
rhalstead@marinij.com
@HalsteadRichard on Twitter

Marie Richard, 86, of San Rafael lives on a meager Social Security allotment supplemented by some modest investment earnings. Ronald Taylor, 75, of Fairfax gets by solely on income derived by renting two of his three bedrooms.

Richard and Taylor are two of the 17 low-income seniors living in Marin who have so far applied for a state program that will allow them to postpone payment of their property taxes indefinitely. The state has reinstated the program after suspending it in 2009-10 due to a lack of revenue after the onset of the Great Recession.

When the program was halted, there were 134 Marin residents using it, including Richard and Taylor.

Seniors who are 62 or older, and people who are blind or have some other disability, may be eligible for an indefinite postponement. Applicants for postponement must also own and occupy their home, have a total income of $35,500 or less and have at least 40 percent equity in the property.

Under the program, the state pays eligible property owners' property taxes, extending them a low-interest loan that comes due when they die or the property is sold. If the participant dies and a spouse survives, the spouse can still maintain the postponement. Delinquent taxes are not eligible for deferment. More information on the program is available on the state controller's website.

Roy Given, Marin County's director of finance, has created a web page, marin-county.org/propertytaxexemptions, that lists each of the county's many parcel taxing agencies, whether the agency offers an exemption, and how to contact them. The site even includes a link to the application that needs to be filled out to apply.

Senior exemptions are available for most Marin school and library parcel taxes, and some towns such as San Anselmo and Mill Valley offer their own tax exemption and rebate programs.

THE HEART OF TANGO SINGS

Take me away in the secret of the night

The waltz across the stars in the smile of the moon

Your heart dances in my soul

Your warm lovely eyes bring tears of joy

On luminous wings of love

A breathless swoon . . . children running carelessly

In a meadow of wild white daisys

The laughter of the wind sings the ages

Ancestral Dreams in a reverie of gentle caresses

A spirits breath sings about the endless afternoons

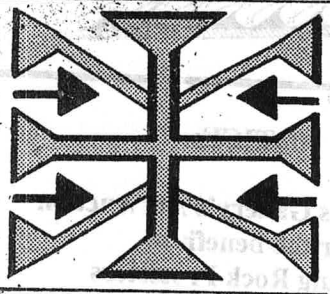

Meanderings through woodland oaks dancing

Singing with the sunlight of music

Nature's embrace in a roll of Maple leaves

We whisper the secrets of our hearts

District signs off on seawall application

By Samantha Kimmey

A seawall in Bolinas involving some interesting property lines could get a substantial upgrade: representatives for the property owner of 100 Brighton Avenue nabbed permission from the Bolinas Community Public Utility District last month to apply for permits to replace and improve the wall that fronts the home.

The owner—an entity named AMJT Capital, according to assessor’s records—needed district approval because a small portion of the wall is actually on district property. Lawyers for the district are now reviewing a request by the owner for a 99-year seawall easement on the public property, which they say they need in order to conduct future maintenance and repairs.

The BCPUD board is likely to approve that easement soon, but these are only the first steps in applying for and actually acquiring coastal permits, not a simple task when it comes to the California Coastal Commission.

The replacement wall, which Novato-based Noble Consultants is designing, would be located within the footprint of the current wall, with high-tension rods installed 30-feet deep into bedrock under the house, according to minutes from an August meeting of the utility district.

POINT REYES LIGHT January 5, 2017

The primary purpose of the wall, which is over 40 years old, is to protect the private home at the end of Brighton, which last sold for over $3 million in 2009. But it would also benefit the community, said Jack Siedman, a longtime BCPUD board director.

“I think it makes public access...much safer and easier,” Mr. Siedman said.

During high tide, the only way to travel between Brighton Ave. and the west end of Brighton Beach is by walking along the top of the wall. But that isn’t easy for everyone; if someone is at the west end of the beach when the shore is overtaken by a high tide, he or she must scramble up rocks to reach the top of the wall and walk along it back to Brighton.

It’s a struggle for some people, particularly parents with young children or the elderly, Mr. Siedman said.

The wall also presents problems for emergency responders. Anita Tyrell-Brown, the Bolinas fire chief, said the situation “is a little precarious, especially [when] carrying people or equipment.”

Rescue missions are not especially frequent in that area, perhaps numbering half a dozen a year—except on the Fourth of July. This past Independence Day, the fire department was called to the area eight times. “That part of the beach is a hangout spot,” she said.

The new wall would include stairs on the west end to facilitate easier access to the top of the wall, as well as new guardrails. David Nelson, a lawyer working on the project for AMJT Capital, said at a December BCPUD meeting that the district’s approval of the application would help start what was likely to be an “arduous permit process.” (Neither he nor another representative for the owner responded to a request for comment for more details about the project.)

Though not discussed at the December meeting, seawall projects are met with a critical eye at the California Coastal Commission, which will ultimately approve or deny the project. Seawalls have come under fire for ill effects on the environment, particularly for limiting sand supply on beaches. Especially as sea levels rise, the walls are often critiqued for leaving beaches with no room to migrate inward, thereby putting beach access in danger.

In recent years, the coastal commission has imposed 20-year expiration dates on permits for the walls. That doesn’t mean they would necessarily have to be taken down when the permit expires, but rather that property owners must again prove their case. The state Supreme Court is set to review one case in which a property owner in Encinitas sued the coastal commission over the expiration date imposed on a permit for a replacement seawall.

The BCPUD board also made it clear that allowing the property owner to apply for permits on its behalf did not give the owner carte blanche to do anything. The district could revoke that permission at any time, for instance if plans change in a way the district deems problematic.

Another property issue also came up at the December BCPUD meeting involving surprising results from a recent land survey: the district owns a small portion of property behind the fence at 100 Brighton that was long assumed to be private, while AMJT Capital actually owns a small portion of Brighton Avenue assumed to be public. But the discussion over a potential land swap was tabled for the time being to focus on the seawall project.

“What’s most pressing is getting permits to replace it with something far better for the public and protective of the property, which are the two goals of the seawall,” Mr. Nelson said at the December meeting.
