Bolinas Museum presents
Great Minds Panel Discussion
BETWEEN THE TIDES: LIVING SHORELINES
IN A TIME OF CLIMATE CHANGE
 Saturday, October 21~ 2 - 4 PM
 at Bolinas Community Center ~ Free

This panel will examine the important role oysters play in the ecology of our bays and the promise they offer for creating resiliency. As we look to the future, how can our past inform the ways in which we adapt to the environmental challenges we face? Throughout the United States and beyond, oyster reefs are being tested as an approach to mitigate the effects of climate change and to restore critical habitat to our waterways. These pilot projects also offer insight into our ecological history. New York harbor was once teaming with oysters and shell mounds were a fixture of San Francisco Bay's 19th century shoreline. This panel discussion coincides with the current environmental-themed exhibitions at Bolinas Museum.

Moderated by Alison Sant of the Studio for Urban Projects with panelists Katharyn Boyer, Professor of Biology at the Romberg Tiburon Center for Environmental Studies, San Francisco State University; Maria Brown, Superintendent of the Greater Farallones National Marine Sanctuary; Robin Grossinger, Senior Scientist and Program Director of the San Francisco Estuary Institute's Resilient Landscapes Program; and Terry Sawyer, cofounder of Hog Island Oyster Company. Free ~ Suggested $10 donation at the door.

The Three "B's" Need Water as Well

 Because of the drought, we have watered our garden very sparingly. But last Sunday, because it was so hot, dry and windy, and our plants were drooping, Magi took on the one hour job of watering. When he came inside he told this story; how, as he began soaking the bushes and all the potted plants, swarms of bees and butterflies (monarchs) flew into the garden to drink water! (Their mouths are so tiny I never think of them in terms of actually needing it! Magi says they must be able to smell it.) He even saw an old bumblebee washing the dust off his face. Then the birds flew in next, so he filled all the birdbaths and empty garden containers. He said the monarchs were lining the brick paths soaking up moisture.

With so much tragedy happening all around us, we were very grateful for such an event of normalcy in our garden! Even though it has rained a little bit, the forecast is for more hot days ahead. Please put out water for all the little critters! Water is Life!

Thank You, and God Bless Everyone!

OHMME (Chicago) is an experiment in voice and sound by Sima Cunningham and Macie Stewart. They joined forces in 2014, inspired by the free improvisational music scene in Chicago, and influenced by folk and avant-garde rock. Their combined vocal and musical talents yield an incredible dichotomy of harmony and chaos that leaves the audience wanting more. OHMME has been compared to PJ Harvey, Nirvana, and Kate Bush, but their innate chemistry creates something uniquely satisfying and wholly different from their predecessors. Their self-titled EP was released on June 30, 2017 on Fox Hall Records. You can find more information on their website - www.ohmmemusic.com/ . www.interviewmagazine.com/music/discovery-ohmme-1#

OHMME is currently touring with Iron and Wine, though I&W will not be gracing the Farmstand this time around!

BUILDING FOR LIFE

License #946778 - fully insured and bonded

Hi friends,

I'm writing to offer my services for creative work and teaching.

I have a background in photography, graphic design, web design and videography.

I've done some local projects for artists and companies and can give you references.

I've taken pictures for the New York Times and have done design work for Old Navy, Sephora and many smaller companies, some of which I've started. I've made short films for brands and designers. I started and edited a classical arts site in the Bay Area for several years and helped start a non-profit doing solar work in Zambia which led to projects in Uganda and India.

I've been designing websites recently, doing a combination of design, copywriting and photography.

I work a lot with smartphones to make visual art, short films and mobile photography. I'm really interested in the possibilities of these powerful tools for creation and self publishing - both online and desktop (books).

I put up some examples of past work on an unlinked page of my personal website:

www.perryshimon.com/design password: welcome

I would like to take on a few projects - websites, graphic design, photo/video work, etc. I'm also open to taking on one or two clients with retainers for ongoing work. I've been assisting some local artists in realizing new media based work. And teaching - would be fun too!

My rate is $50 - $100/hour. Depending on the scope of the work.

Please keep me in mind...

Kind thanks,

Perry

Future of Seashore Ranching

The National Park Service is beginning the planning process for a General Management Plan Amendment for Point Reyes National Seashore and the north district of Golden Gate National Recreation Area. This Amendment will update management guidance for more than 28,000 acres of NPS lands, including all lands currently leased for ranching. More information is available at: go.nps.gov/pore.

The 30-day comment period has now begun on a conceptual range of management alternatives. The public is encouraged to share observations, concerns, and ideas to help focus the Amendment on significant issues in the planning area (including for example, ranch lease terms and elk management). The information thus obtained will be used to refine the conceptual range of alternatives, identify issues, and ensure that NPS has the information needed to move forward in the planning process. The comment period ends on November 15, 2017.

NPS will be hosting two open-house meetings during this comment period. The public is invited to attend these meetings to convey thoughts and ask questions of their representatives. The meetings will be identical in format and are intended to gather public comments for use in shaping the plan. They will be held at the following times and locations:

- * Wednesday, October 25, 5-7pm
West Marin School Gym, Pt. Reyes Station
- * Thursday, October 26, 5-7pm
Bay Model Visitor Center, Sausalito

Comments also may be submitted on-line, or by mailing or hand-delivering comments to:

- * GMP Amendment, c/o Superintendent, PRNS
1 Bear Valley Rd, Pt. Reyes Station, CA 94956

More opportunities for public comment will be available later during the planning process. Once NPS has refined the conceptual range of alternatives with public input and can analyze the potential impacts, they will begin the second phase of planning. At that time, they will publish a Notice Of Intent to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement and initiate the formal National Environmental Policy Act process.

VICTORY! Gov. Brown Vetoed SB 649, the Telecom Coup Bid in California!

But stronger, similar Federal bills are in the works...

From the Mercury News:

Gov. Jerry Brown vetoes bill easing permits on cell phone towers

Gov. Jerry Brown late Sunday vetoed Senate Bill 649, which proposed to scale back local government permit processes for antennas and equipment for wireless services.

Gov. Jerry Brown late Sunday vetoed a bill backed by the cell phone industry that would have made it easier to install microwave radiation antennas.

Senate Bill 649, authored by Sen. Ben Hueso, D-San Diego and co-authored by Assemblyman Bill Quirk, D-Hayward, proposed to scale back the permitting process for antennas and other equipment in an effort to meet demand for wireless services.

In a signing statement, Brown wrote that while he saw the value in "extending this innovative technology rapidly and efficiently," the bill took too much control away from cities and counties.

The bill was primarily supported by the Cellular Telecommunications and Internet Association, the main trade group for the U.S. wireless telecommunications industry. The group said SB 649 would help boost the economy.

Yet the bill had alarmed many local government officials around the state. They worried if SB 649 became law, it would cap how much they could charge phone companies for leases to $250 a year. Others raised concerns about the risk to public health from cell towers.

Grass-roots activists and scientists said that if SB 649 became law, a projected 50,000 new cellular antennas would be installed on public buildings and utility poles in California neighborhoods, creating a risk to public health because of the dangers of radiation and electromagnetic frequencies emitted by cell towers.

"I am thrilled that Governor Brown showed strength and stood up to this powerful wireless industry and said no — you are not going to do this in my state!" Ellen Marks, a San Francisco-based leader of the California Alliance for Safer Technology, wrote in an email after Brown's decision was posted online.

"This is a tremendous victory for democracy," said Marks, whose group is trying to keep cellular antennas away from homes, schools, offices and parks.

An industry spokeswoman said the bill maintained local authority for "small cell" antennas, particularly in historical or coastal areas, and that governments could recover capital and administrative costs.

San Jose Mayor Sam Liccardo was among several Bay Area leaders who voiced their opposition to the bill.

Quirk and Hueso called the health concerns overblown, saying the cell towers are safe.

Joel Moskowitz, director of the Center for Family and Community Health at UC Berkeley's School of Public Health, was heartened by Brown's veto, coming on the heels of a federal appeals court ruling last week that supports Berkeley's landmark cell phone "right to know" ordinance.

The city law, which took effect in 2016, requires retailers to warn cellphone customers that wearing their device next to the body could result in exposure to radio frequency radiation exceeding federal guidelines. Cellphone retailers must either post the message or provide a paper copy to anyone who buys or leases phones.

"The Governor's veto of SB 649 protects Californians from exposure to millimeter radiation from as many as 50,000 new cell towers," Moskowitz wrote in an email Sunday night.

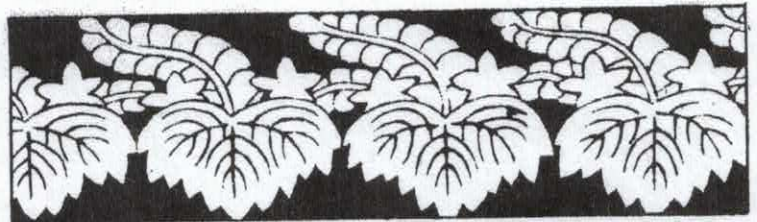

He noted that more than 180 scientists and doctors have signed a declaration calling for a moratorium on the increase of cell antennas required for 5G deployment, "as we are concerned about the health effects including neurological impacts, infertility, and cancer."
