For those attending my mother Ruth's service, you may run into the regular weekend parking crunch, so if possible walking is a good option. Also if you park in the designated area at the Mesa Park parking lot, you can get a ride to the church via Howard (pager-415-485-4008), or take the foot path down to town.
Thanks, Janine

WHY I READ THE IJ

This band coming to Smiley,s on Saturday sounds amazing. I might even go. Paul Lliberatore wrote a big review on the front page of the IJ entertainment section today, advertising that it's coming to Smiley's.

I admit to being an old lady who is totally out of the What's Happening loop. I worry that Smiley's is contributing to our recent increase in overwhelm.

What do we think?

Susie Stewart

Dear Bolinas Folk,

Many of you will be saddened to hear that poet, thinker and bright spirit Daniel Abdal Hayy Moore passed away last month.

I first got to know Abdal Hayy as my friend Salihah's father, a gregarious and thoughtful dad, out on visits to see his daughter and old Bay Area haunts.

Over the years, I slowly began to realize what a legendary figure he was. I became a fan of his poetry, volume after volume of deeply humorous and deeply serious explorations of God and Self and Earth, best heard recited in person, punctuated by a cosmic strum of his zither.

I started to hear some amazing stories; the solitary proto-psychedelic winter at the Kent Estate here in Bolinas in 1963 writing "Dawn Visions," the Floating Lotus Opera Company's primal shriek against the modern world, the temporary utopian free-form experiment in Mexico and on and on...

Salihah and I are organizing a screening of some archival Floating Lotus footage in Bolinas this Fall. Stay tuned...

What follows is a sweet piece posted on the City Lights Bookstore website:

Jeff Manson, Friday Ed.

Remembering Daniel Abdal Hayy Moore, July 30, 1940 – April 18, 2016

by Nancy Peters via City Lights Books website

Thinking of Daniel recently, I found in my bookcase a treasured copy of his poetry book Dawn Visions, which City Lights published in 1964. It is one of 50 limited-edition copies, the covers of which Daniel had hand-painted with bright Blakean images—moon, fire, wings, dark angel, and a path up a mountain to a radiant castle. I was struck by the book's dedication to Indian musician Ali Akbar Khan and Bodhisattva Avalokiteshvara, which I didn't remember having read before:

—you sit in the radiant Grove and everything's ear is a cupped transparent shell for your sound—

This seems to me now a perfect emblem for Daniel himself, a bright, graceful and open spirit who created wonderful poetry, translations, theater, paintings, songs, opera, libretti, essays, and works for children. It was a delight to spend time with him, for he had an inquiring mind and a wry sense of humor.

When, in 1970, Moore became a Muslim, having discovered in Islam the spiritual path that was right for him, he took the name Abdal Hayy and spent several years traveling in North Africa and Europe, active in the Sufi community.

City Lights published his second book of poems, Burnt Heart: Ode to the War Dead, a response to the Vietnam tragedy, in 1972. A great many more visionary volumes of poetry followed. His website The Ecstatic Exchange confirms the wide range of his prolific life as an artist in many media over half a century.

Carolyn Forché aptly called Moore a "surrealist of the sacred." Like his friend Philip Lamantia, everything interested him, all things taking part in the consciousness-cosmos he was impelled to explore. He pressed language to its limits, seeking image and sound that might put words to the unnameable Mystery.

Daniel was perhaps best known as the originator of the Floating Lotus Magic Opera. At the high point of the counterculture in the Bay Area, the FLMO presented two unforgettable open-air ritual dramas in Berkeley's John Hinkel Park, ecstatic productions inspired by the chanting of Tibetan monks, Kathakali ritual, Asian folk and religious theater, as well as the flow of the 60s psychedelic zeitgeist. Staged at night and illuminated only by firelight, Moore used the natural environment to great advantage. "Our thirst for the primordial keeps us from using electricity to amplify any of the instruments or actors." This was the central idea:

*The whole vision is designed to be performed outside in the raw air of IT on a hillside after civilizations blow all their plugs, and still the spirit dances, approachable and manifestable
within us. . . .*

Daniel's vision attracted poets, musicians, dancers, actors, and artists, many of whom collaborated in this theatrical tour de force, as actors or as makers of beautiful costumes and painted masks, sets and backdrops. The drama itself involved an intense conflict between good and evil forces; actors wearing fantastic masks, and playing gongs & drums & horns, transformed the violent energies of war into an illuminated and jubilant space.

In her memoir, the painter Ariel Parkinson captured the experience. She suggested that . . .

"Daniel's vision was difficult for most people to stomach, his critique of this bloated, exploded planet and what transformation requires. Daniel had valuable ideas, poetic and philosophical, to express the age in a powerful way. Building a culture requires building a world of Imagination and Vision . . . The Floating Lotus Magic Opera existed. It exists. I took Daniel's magic with me."

All of us who knew Daniel and admired his work will take his magic with us.

86 kids in Bo-Stin School this fall?

Jenny's Monday column reports a projected enrollment of 86 students for this Fall, "a startling reduction of almost 15%".

Jenny attributes this dramatic drop to housing.

Enquiring minds would like to see the number of potential students who are either going to other schools or being home schooled because of a shortfall in quality education (especially math) as well as bullying. Anecdotal evidence figures this number to be especially high.

FLUORIDE IN THE WATER: DUMB AND SICKER PT.2

The Iowa Fluoride Study is the longest study of the effects of fluoride. Steven Levy of the University of Iowa College of Dentistry tracked hundreds of children for 16 years and measured levels of fluoride in thousands of products. His findings are reported in Second Thoughts About Fluoride in Scientific American (Jan. 2008).

More than a third of children Levy studied were taking in enough fluoride from water based formula and their toothpaste, (half of which toddlers swallow) to mottle their permanent teeth. High amounts of fluoride are in juices, sodas, coffee, beef gravy and canned crabmeat from fluoridated tap water. Tea, grapes and raisins concentrate fluoride from the soil and chicken products with ground bone are significant sources.

High fluoride levels increase bone fractures in the elderly and diabetic. Acidic fluoride compounds in municipal water supplies act as a solvent on copper and lead in pipes, releasing heavy metals in tap water. Fluoride disrupts endocrine systems, especially thyroid function which regulates metabolism and growth.

The Forsyth Institute in Boston found that male rats exposed to fluoride before birth were more likely to be hyperactive, while exposures after birth caused female rats to be more sedentary. Epidemiological studies from China, Iran, India, and Mexico showed high fluoride levels lowered IQ, possibly by enhancing the uptake of lead into the brain.

A Harvard Dental School study by Elisa Bassin in 2006 showed increased bone cancers for boys drinking fluoridated water during their peak growth years. Her dissertation advisor at Harvard, Professor Chester Douglas wrote a commentary in the same issue of Cancer Causes and Controls, warning that better unpublished data contradicted her findings. Douglas is editor of a Colgate toothpaste funded newsletter for dentists.

Why would dentist organizations recommend something to reduce their income? Shouldn't they be giving out candy on street corners? It doesn't make sense.

No other drug is administered without a specific dose, but fluoride depends on water intake. Allowable limits were originally higher in the northern states, presuming they drank less water than southerners, but the EPA recently leveled the playing field for fluorosis on both sides of the Mason Dixon line. Since it's unapproved, the FDA takes no responsibility for its safety or effectiveness at reducing tooth decay. Yet the CDC ranks water fluoridation with mass vaccination in the Top Ten Greatest Public Health Accomplishments of the 20th Century.
