TRUST: SECOND ACTS IN YOUNG LIVES

Local filmmakers Nancy Kelly and Kenji Yamamoto (Smitten, Downside UP, Thousand Pieces of Gold) present their award-winning documentary TRUST: Second Acts in Young Lives. Moving, intimate, and celebratory, TRUST is about Marlin, an 18-year-old Hondureña who shares a bit about her childhood with a teen theater company in her neighborhood. It is a traumatic story. Amazing things unfold for Marlin as the young actors transform her story into a daring, original play. TRUST is about the unexpected resources inside people who are often discounted because they are poor, young, or of color. Discussion with the filmmakers follows.

Co-presented by Point Reyes Books.

Go to Health – the Ethics of Eating Meat

The Ethicist, Ariel Kaminer, writing in the New York Times Sunday magazine, recently proposed a contest to readers – make an ethical case for eating meat. Thousands of readers sent in essays. Five judges, who included Mark Bittman, Peter Singer and Michael Pollan, narrowed the entries down to six finalists, whose main ideas I will attempt to summarize. (It has been noted that all these judges were white men, and many readers wanted Marion Nestle to be among them.) Readers have voted on these 6 essays, and the winner will be announced next Sunday. The essays I will outline are listed in order of popularity on April 20th (the deadline for voting was April 24th). The first essay listed here won the most votes, and so forth.

*His Australian father taught him to love hunting and a high meat diet. When his father developed gout, colon cancer, heart problems and stroke, the writer became aware of the ethical problems of killing animals, and took a 40 year hiatus from meat eating. He now looks forward to eating meat again without worrying about his health, cruelty to animals or environmental degradation. He thinks that meat will soon be available, grown from cow, chicken, pig and fish cells in laboratories – without manure lagoons or contamination with dangerous bacteria.

*The writer is a young woman farmer who says that small scale farming requires the use of animals to clear cropland – goats and chickens – and to nourish the soil with their manure. Animal husbandry teaches her about the natural order of life and death. When you eat eggs or drink milk, you should know that the male roosters or bulls must be culled from the herd, and either eaten or wasted. The eating of animals is part of a balanced system of food production that is regenerative. Without farm animals, food production would require more use of fossil fuels in the forms of fertilizers and chemicals. This is why eating animals is ethical.

*The writer is a vegetarian who returned to meat eating. S/he feels that animals are raised and killed in cruel conditions, animals receive grain that should be given to hungry people, pasture land leads to deforestation, and eating meat is killing a sentient being. However, in some climates, such as dry grasslands, eating animals is a better choice than trying to grow vegetable sources of protein. Eating meat is ethical if you realize that all life is solar energy stored in an impermanent form, if you choose ethically raised vegetables, grains or meat, and if you give thanks.

*The writer is a farmer who became a lacto-vegetarian at age 7 because of love for animals. When s/he became a farmer s/he realized that bone and blood meal, fish emulsion and domestic animals were an integral part of vegetable farming. Animals are essential in a balanced food system. It is not ethical to eat animals raised in industrial-scaled confinement operations. There is an ethical option, even responsibility, to eat animals raised in a sustainable farm system and slaughtered with compassion.

*The writer discusses many moral choices we make, such as spending money on ourselves rather than charities, and having children rather than adopting them. We may choose to feed our family meat because of lack of time or knowledge on how to prepare vegetable protein. We need to rank the reasons for various moral decisions, realizing that the moral world is complex and the quest for any one good thing may require the sacrifice of others. We should attempt to tread more lightly on the earth, and realize that eating meat can be both ethical and tragic.

*The writer feels that it is morally permissible to kill and eat animals, if their basic needs are met in their lives, and their killing is painless. However, the killing of animals for food can be harmful to people, because most of us love animals and are upset by the idea that they are slaughtered for us. We learn to put this idea out of our heads, but it continues to affect us. The author felt a considerable freedom and lightness by giving up meat. As feeling creatures, there is a powerful self-interested reason to not eat meat.

I find these essays to be compelling. As a skeptic, I think the most popular essay on 'in vitro meat' to have an element of science fiction, at least for feeding the world's growing population. However, the Dutch have been working on this for years. Scientists at Maastricht University plan to produce sausage and hamburger in 2012. It is probable that animal growth factors and antibiotics will be necessary in the production process. We will need to stay tuned, and in the meantime support our local farmers.

MONDAY MORNING MEETINGS & MISCELLANY

4/30/12 RECAP From Jenniepeiffer

TODAY IS THE LAST DAY OF APRIL, so if there is anything you needed to get done in April, you have the remainder of this day to do it. Otherwise, it shifts to your marvelous Mayhem May "to do" list and you have a whole new month to procrastinate doing it.

April went by fast, with lots of rain, some beautiful sun, and the sad departure of Howard Meyer, who died Sunday May 22, at 97 years old. I didn't know him well, just the occasional White Caps luncheon, but was very impressed at how thoughtful and articulate he remained through to the end of his long life - an inspiring model. I appreciated reading the pertinent, topical comments he wrote for Hearsay News publication. Condolences to his family and friends and the team of excellent caregivers that saw to his needs and comfort to the very end.

There were several community meetings of import this week, ending with Saturday's Bolinas Community Center planning session preparing for this weekend's big ART AND GARDENS three day annual event (means you can support the Children's Center and still get to A & G.) It's a great way to celebrate the glories of spring. This year the theme is "FOR THE BIRDS" and there will be many bird related activities and items available - morning bird walks with Keith Hansen, silent auction offerings, and presentations by local bird experts and enthusiasts. This is one of the Center's major fun fundraisers, and there are lots of ways to help, so it's not too late to jump in, or contribute an item for auction. There are small art canvasses, just the right size for your wall, being painted by local artists, available for bid. Artists! Time to get those panels delivered!

Moving backward through the week, Friday, there was a planning meeting for the upcoming Harriet Kossman Retirement Bash. Harriet's retiring after 40 years (not 30 as previously reported), of coordinating the art program at the school. That means hanging 40 year-end art shows! This will be her last, so we're going to celebrate with her! After the students show their work at the Bolinas Campus, everyone is invited to walk across the street to the Murch's Farmstand Gallery space for refreshments and a viewing of some of Harriet's work along side that of former students of hers. If you made art in Harriet's artshop, you're invited to contribute a piece to the show. Call the art shops at school, 868-1603, for information.

Thursday, a special School Board meeting was held to get input from the community regarding forming an ad hoc facilities committee to look at ways to make room for incorporating preschool into the district program and still have adequate space for the other primary classes. It was well attended and Principal Leo Kostelnik made a presentation regarding the many benefits of having the preschoolers on campus. It is on the agenda for the regular May Board of Trustees meeting tomorrow. There will be time for public comment on this issue then.

Wednesday night was the regular last Wednesday of the month Midnight on the Water birthday celebration at Smiley's. It seems to come around faster every month.

Before that, and after Wed. pickup soccer, there was another tutorial for parents - this one in the 3rd grade by Sarah Brummel, who did a fine job of giving parents a sample of what it's like to be a 3rd grade student.

Tuesday, Uniquities had a partners' Pirate Pizza meeting in the Plaza. As we enjoyed the late setting sun, we officially welcomed StuArt, talked shop, and ate pizza & salad before the Tuesday game night started at the BCC.

Monday's Fireboard meeting was short and efficient and there will be no cell tower action taken until further request from one of the lessees. Chief Anita Tyrrell-Brown will be talking with County Planning regarding solar installation inspections. She has been the one in town assigned that task, so will see what the County requires in terms of permits and inspection. As soon as that is determined, information will be posted.

And that was the week that was. Happy May Day. jp

Sunday, May 6
