WEEKLY WRAP & RECAP 2/11/13

From Jenniepeiffer

It was another busy week in Bolinas, ending with a weekend of beautiful weather for art, music, and recycling. Mary Siedman's opening for her excellent exhibit at the Murch's Farmstand, showed her new works full of exploding springtime gardens and flowers and the joy of being in nature. I love her large canvasses with their riot of color and rapturous blossoms popping out from a tangle of greenery. The opening reception was festive, spilling out into the sunshiny out-of-doors. I got there rather late in the afternoon, after spending the bigger part of the day hosting the February Valentine Second Saturday Sale on Brighton Square, (B-right-on Square as Beha liked to call it), then went to the KWMR Sweethearts of the Radio amazing music in Pt. Reyes.

The monthly Royal Rummage sale, that happens on the patio next to the post office the 2nd Saturday of every month, had a wonderful variety of items available. StuArt showed his latest black and white sketches of imaginative Smiley's patrons: sea creatures, Wild West characters, intergalactic gatherings, and some representations of historical events that have formed the large lore gathered from the many decades Smiley's has been open for business. They were humorous and delightful, tastefully mounted on his newly constructed classy Chippendale sign boards.

The flea market part of the event had furniture, household items, electronics, fresh Carmen tamales, clothing, and a variety of this and that. Uniquities provided tea and coffee and valentine cupcakes, with three candles which we lit and blew out after singing the Bolinas Happy Birthday song in honor of our three years in business. This is perfect weather for clutter clearing, so start thinking of what you might want to release at the 2nd Saturday Sale next month. It will be March 9th.

SCHOOL EVENTS of the week started Monday evening with a Pre School for All Task Force Launch Event, in the Quesada on the Bolinas Campus. It was Facilitated by Ethel Seiderman, early childhood expert and veteran of many years of preschool advocacy and teaching. Her presentation was an interesting interactive examination of the values we hope to instill in our early learners, and how that might be best approached. The two dozen or so participants were seated at white clothed round tables, and were treated to refreshments prepared by our Administrative staff, in coordination with the school's kitchen professionals. There will be a Task Force group selected this month to start the research and planning in earnest - applications available at the office.

Tuesday night was the regular School Board of Trustees monthly meeting, held in the library. The principal and superintendent reports filled us in on the highlights of the past month. The budget report showed no cuts in funding, and explained that many spending decisions will be shifted back to the Districts. Our enrollment now stands at 107, with two more students entering this week. Federal nutritional guidelines have been updated, and our district is scheduled to have a compliance review and audit in the coming months. The school's Fiscal Oversight and Advisory Committee (FOAC) will meet Feb. 11, to discuss the parcel tax, which is expiring on 6/30/14. Other projects on campus include a Mindfulness program, an edible garden project, a new climbing wall installed on the Bolinas campus, a proposed 5th grade field trip to Mount Shasta (which brought up some discussion regarding field trip policy), and many more exciting activities to stimulate our learners, and augment the school's outstanding instructional program. Minutes of meetings are always available in the office and on line, after they have been approved. The schoolweek ended with the annual library book sale, that Steve Aikenhead organizes every year.

More sunshine in the weather report, an exceptionally mild and beautiful February. I am grateful for these days.

Solar industry grapples with hazardous wastes

By Jason Dearen
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Homeowners on the hunt for sparkling solar panels are lured by ads filled with images of pristine landscapes and bright sunshine, and words about the technology's benefits for the environment — and the wallet.

What customers may not know is that there's a dirtier side.

While solar is a far less polluting energy source than coal or natural gas, many panel makers are nevertheless grappling with a hazardous waste problem. Fueled partly by billions in government incentives, the industry is creating millions of solar panels each year and, in the process, millions of pounds of polluted sludge and contaminated water.

To dispose of the material, the companies must transport it by truck or rail far from their own plants to waste facilities hundreds and, in some cases, thousands of miles away.

The fossil fuels used to transport that waste, experts say, is not typically considered in calculating solar's carbon footprint, giving scientists and consumers who use the measurement to gauge a product's impact on global warming the impression that solar is cleaner than it is.

After installing a solar panel, "it would take one to three months of generating electricity to pay off the energy invested in driving those hazardous waste emissions out of state," said Dustin Mulvaney, a San Jose State University environmental studies professor who conducts carbon footprint analyses of solar, biofuel and natural gas production.

The waste from manufacturing has raised concerns within the industry, which fears that the problem, if left unchecked, could undermine solar's green image at a time when companies are facing stiff competition from each other and from low-cost panel manufacturers from China and elsewhere.

A correction in the little piece about Ash Wednesday and St. Aidan's. On Ash Wednesday. St. Aidan's is inviting folks to reflect on their "mortality," not "morality." The latter we'll leave to you on your own time!!

The Rev'd Whitney Wherrett Roberson
Vicar
St. Aidan's Episcopal Church
Bolinas, CA

Next Wednesday (February 13) is Ash Wednesday and St. Aidan's is offering a novel opportunity: the chance to pause a moment and think about our morality, that is, to reflect on what's really important to us. There's a little ritual that's part of the Christian spiritual tradition: once a year we have a bit of ash smudged on our foreheads as the words are said, "Remember you are dust and to dust you shall return..." Rather austere, you say. Yes, and that's the point: occasionally we need to stop our business and usual for a moment and reflect on the deeper things of life: that time is precious, and limited; that what we do and say matters in this life and changes the world around us; that we are part of that world, have come from it and will return to it, part of a great web of Being for which we share responsibility and to which we are accountable.

St. Aidan's vicar, Whitney Roberson, will be standing near the Post Office in her white vestment and stole next Wednesday between noon and 1:00 offering ashes to anyone who might want to pause for moment's reflection about what matters most in this life....

Bolinas-Stinson preschool forum

By Lynn Axelrod

“Don’t bother being better than anyone else. Be better than yourself.” The quotation by William Faulkner was one of several Ethel Seiderman handed out to the roughly 30 people who attended a preschool forum at the Bolinas school Monday evening.

The goal of the evening was to recruit members to a task force that will study the possibility of setting up a public preschool for all children in the Bolinas-Stinson school district. A $25,000 grant from First 5 Marin is underwriting the year-long effort.

Seiderman, a much lauded preschool authority, put the group through some exercises that brought out shared values such as family, truth and honesty, community, compassion and kindness. These would be needed to guide the work of the committee, she said, especially when controversies arise.

A bell-ringing dispute arose last year when district trustees voted to give the privately run Stinson Beach preschool one last year to lease a district classroom. The decision was based on the need to use the room for the district’s K-8 students.

It stirred heated argument by the parents of the affected tots. Others felt that the Stinson preschool had an unfair advantage over the other preschool, the Bolinas Children’s Center, which also serves the community’s children. The directors of both preschools were present Monday as were two trustees and school principal Elaine Doss.

Seiderman told the group to think of preschool not as the first link to kindergarten but as an independent period of discovery in children’s lives. She also commented on how the adults should behave, some of which, she said, reflects on how children are treated.

Communications require giving others space to clarify statements so that “battle lines” are not drawn. The committee should remember its shared values, she also advised, when and if it’s accused of “a hidden agenda.”

Having faced some of her own battles to pioneer preschool education, Seiderman told the group that precedent often is “used to keep the status quo.” She also recommended the district remember to include all the population cultures of the community in its discussions.

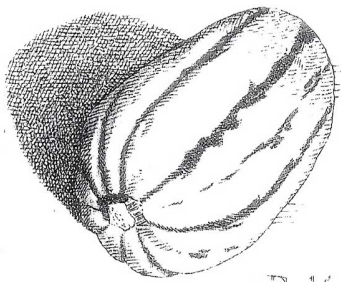

Dave Cort, who runs the San Geronimo Valley Community Center, was present. His community and others, he said, are looking at this as a possible model to develop their own publicly run preschool.

Superintendent Larry Enos said the composition of the task force can vary but the current nine-member makeup will be two preschool parents and one community member along with district staff, teachers and administration.

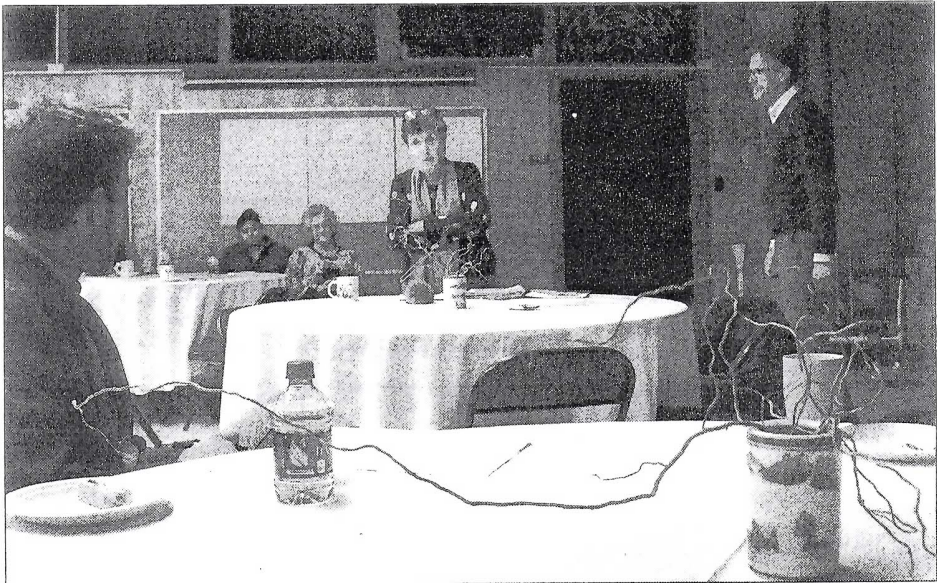

Enos said that while the outcome is unpredictable - it can range from one or five preschool classes, school-owned or not - there are “so many resources in this tiny community...I hope we don’t blow it.”

The deadline to apply for the committee is February 12. Its members will decide for themselves how they work and when they meet, Enos said. The grant includes committee activities on a monthly basis ranging from visiting a program in Bremerton, Washington, to figuring out how to cover the preschool’s costs.

The task force would hold a community meeting in March to share preliminary recommendations. The goal is a pilot program this fall or in 2014.
