THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- Bright sunny Sunday on the soccer field, then beers with old friends morphing into a late afternoon hot-tub AND friend coming by to offer fresh-caught salmon on the barby. Ah, summer.
- Walking on Stinson Beach, followed by fish tacos at the Siren restaurant, right there on the beach. Highly recommended.
- Elia's exhibit 'Wearable Art' at the Museum—an evocation those trippy 70s and 80s Bolinas days.

Live Theater at Its Best

"Isabella and the Jewel Divine" is the intense and moving story of a young woman who was first inspired by her bawdy and embodied grandma but then suppressed and controlled by a series of societal authorities until she finally resolves to follow her heart. The immensely talented and versatile Crescent Moon troupe uses a rich blend of mime, song, voice, accordion, choreography, costume, magic, and gymnastics to deliver to full effect this beautifully crafted tale that had me alternately laughing, crying, and cringing as the drama spun out with graceful and seamless transitions from scene to scene and mood to mood using minimal props.

It's a brilliant and memorable show with a powerful and important message to anyone wondering whether they're getting what they really want out of life and looking for inspiration (Aren't we all?). Having been enthralled by its first Bolinas performance last October at RDI, I'm eager to see it again. We'll all get that chance on Sunday July 23rd at 5pm at Commonweal's RDI garden. Dress for outdoors; but if it rains, we'll squeeze into the yurt.

READING TO JOHN

On Tues. 7/25 at 10 m on KWMR (89.9) I'll bring you more Orner. As he says, "all lives are interesting." Yes indeed, if you can articulate them through literature, insight, and regret as he does so brilliantly. This time his father with dementia, a rift between siblings, and his wife in the bin. I'll end with reviews.

Homes for Locals????

Below is a copy of a letter I sent last week to Supervisor Rodoni, basically agreeing to what I thought were the main points being made by BCLT and more recent follow up after being taken aback by coverage in Friday's Hearsay.

Re.: SHORT TERM RENTALS, July 18 Hearing

Dear Supervisor Rodoni,

I see articles in the local press calling for our voices to be heard, so here is mine:

I understand and sympathize with the concerns of many of my neighbors about the effect of short term rentals on housing for locals, especially in regard to entire homes.

I am a Marin County native (Drake '64), and purchased my home in Bolinas nearly forty years ago. Since 1995 I have been a self employed artist, and in 2002 I began renting out my guest room (a space that would never be rented full time) on a nightly basis, paying the TOT tax monthly. Many clients have been locals who needed space for visiting family and friends, people attending events in Bolinas such as weddings or programs at Commonweal, and others simply visiting our beautiful coast. The income over the years has been helpful, to say the least. Now in my 70's, this income is critical to my being able to remain in my home.

I would support the ordinance being put forth requiring a permanent resident living on STR property.

Raising the TOT tax by 50% (10% to 15%) seems a bit steep, perhaps a middle ground could be reached.

I hope that you and the other Supervisors will consider all aspects of this complex issue at the Hearing on July 18. The outcome could have far reaching effects for many, including those of us who may not be among the most vocal element of our community.

Sally Robertson

For those of you who were amazed by the voice of Hope Brigg when Bill Quist brought her to Mary Magdalene Church in Bolinas, or those who heard about her and wanted to hear her. She is doing a concert in San Francisco on Tuesday July 18 at 12 noon at Old St. Mary's Church at Grant and California in China Town. By donation. -KO

Now I see in Meg Simond's letter in the Friday Hearsay News that 2 other items have been added: a signage requirement, and, more importantly, a limitation of STR to 90 days per year. My room is rented less than half the year but certainly more than 90 days. This limitation could be devastating to me, and, I assume, to others in my position as well (ironically it would also be counter productive to the BCLT cause if the proposed TOT tax increase is enacted). Homes for Locals? Apparently not for this resident of 40 years.

Alan Margolis, global advocate of family planning, dies at 90

Pt Reyes Light, 7/13/17

By Silas Valentino

Alan Margolis, an obstetrics and gynecology doctor who championed female reproductive rights, advocated for family planning overseas and explored the seashore trails atop his black appaloosa Dusty, died peacefully in his Bolinas home on June 8. He was 90 years old.

After purchasing his home in 1980 with his partner Sadjia Greenwood, Alan integrated himself into the West Marin community, where he diversified his interests. He served on the boards of Green Gulch Zen Center, Audubon Canyon Ranch and the Coastal Health Alliance, and helped establish the community health clinic in Bolinas. An artist, Alan delved into glasswork and, in April, co-produced an art show of his abstract paintings with Kale Likover at the Stinson Beach Library. Family and friends remember his infectious laugh, his ability to actively listen and his compassion toward others.

"He was a real example of the best of humankind," Roy Jacobstein, a longtime friend and colleague, said. "In fact, I thought of him as kind of the living rebuttal to Donald Trump. Instead of being egotistical, he was ego free. Instead of being self-centered, he was oriented to other people and was kind instead of mean. He was the shining example of how to be a better person."

Born on Dec. 28, 1926 in New York City, Alan was the only child of Max, a lawyer, and Claire, a hat maker for Saks 5th Avenue. His father moved to San Francisco to start a law practice when Alan was a toddler, so Alan was initially raised by his mother and aunts, Ethel and Emily, all working women in Manhattan.

"He always said to me that being primarily raised by women had a huge impact on him," his daughter Sarah Pearce said.

Alan and his mother relocated to San Francisco in 1933 by way of ship through the Panama Canal, and the family settled in an apartment near Pacific Heights. Ms. Pearce said her father was teased as a child for being overweight and this led to a lifelong dedication to fitness.

"He never gained weight and he was a fitness enthusiast," she said. "I think those years being a chubby guy really had an impact on him."

Alan would return to the East Coast over summers to visit his aunts and attend camp in Vermont, instilling an early interest in the outdoors. At Lowell High School, he was on the swim team. After graduating in 1943, Alan attended the University of California, Berkeley, to become a doctor.

He was able to expedite his studies during World War II, graduating in five years, at age 22 in 1948. During college, he had met a nursing student named Barbara Murphy and the couple eventually wed. They had two daughters, Susan and Sarah.

After Alan completed his residency at San Francisco General and the University of California, San Francisco Medical Center, he went into the army, where he served as a doctor in Germany for two years. Upon his return to the States in 1955, he opened his first obstetrics and gynecology practice in San Francisco. But he soon grew weary of the burden of a private practice.

"He felt bogged down and wasn't learning anything new," Ms. Pearce said. "He accepted an offer to join the faculty at U.C.S.F. and he was very glad to do that. He had ideas and wanted to do research. His interest in women's health was starting to grow."

Alan, his wife and two daughters lived in the Haight-Ashbury neighborhood during the 1960s. Ms. Pearce said Alan was heavily impacted by the death of a young teenager in an emergency room where he was working due to a botched abortion. He decided to focus his attention on reproductive rights.

Alan had met Ms. Greenwood a decade earlier when both were working at San Francisco General. She had become the director of Planned Parenthood's teenage clinic, and the two teamed up in efforts to legalize abortion in 1967, frequenting Sacramento to support the Therapeutic Abortion Act.

Alan popularized the use of the Kaman cannula, a surgical instrument that made abortions safer, and created a training film that taught doctors medical techniques for safe abortions in 1973 along with Ms. Greenwood.

"He was an extremely good surgeon," Ms. Greenwood said. "He was so smooth and fast, and would quickly stop bleeders. And he was so nice to everybody in the room, including medical students. He didn't bark at them or make them feel ashamed if they didn't know something. He was a real master in the operating room."

Alan's marriage to Ms. Murphy ended in 1970, and he began traveling overseas to promote family planning. Working with the reproductive health organization Pathfinder International, he traveled to places such as Equator, Chile, The Republic of Congo, Bangladesh and Russia, taking photographs of his journeys and producing collages of the pictures for his family.

It was during this time that he began a relationship with Ms. Greenwood that would last until his death.

Ms. Pearce said Ms. Greenwood encouraged Alan to pursue art at a time when doctors were expected to be only professionals.

"There was a social stigma about being a professional and doctors couldn't do art—they had to be a doctor," she said. "Doing something like art and photography was a nice sideline, but not something you devoted time to. Sadjia encouraged him—she's the quintessential woman of the 1960s—and he was ripe for that."

Alan retired from the Department of Obstetrics, Gynecology and Reproductive Sciences at U.C.S.F. in the late 1980s and immediately began working for the Agency for International Development, where he continued to educate nurses and doctors about family planning.

He met Roy Jacobstein at the agency while the two were completing an evaluation in Indonesia in the early 1990s. Mr. Jacobstein lived on the East Coast, but they visited each other annually and remained lifelong friends.

Mr. Jacobstein recalled a surprising moment when he was with his son at the San Francisco Airport.

"I came to visit Alan and there was a photography exhibit in SFO on civil rights pioneers," he said. "Alan and Sadjia both had their picture in there as reproductive rights champions. I knew both of them were beloved figures in Bay Area women's community. They were a great model of a couple mutually supporting each other."

Alan and Ms. Greenwood had purchased a home in Bolinas in 1980 but didn't fully relocate until 1996. In Bolinas, Ms. Pearce said her father could relax. No longer under the pressures of a professional career, he began calling himself a "country guy." He owned a Bernese mountain dog called Ladi and purchased a horse he named Dusty. He kept the appaloosa at Vanishing Point Ranch and would often ride with the ranch's owner, Sally Peacock.

"He called Bear Valley Broadway," Ms. Peacock said. "And when we got to the coast, he'd always comment about the 'Great Pacific.' He was super healthy and on rides he would make these little Tofurky sandwiches. He was such a good sport; he was in the over 30s pony club shows. He and Dusty had a great time together."

Michael Mery of Point Reyes Station encouraged Alan to join him on the board of the Coastal Health Alliance. The two became friends, traveling to Utah for a rafting trip and making a spontaneous trip to Los Angeles for a day to see an exhibit on Russian Orthodox icons at the J. Paul Getty Museum.

"Loving Alan was very easy to do," Mr. Mery said. "He was a rather irresistible character and knew how to be a good friend. He wasn't worried about success or failure, but was interested in process. One way to think of Alan was he was 'up for it.' That was his approach to life."

In his final years, Alan made glasswork, giving detailed dinner plates as

JOIN US*Short Term Rental (STR) Hearing
Tues July 18 at 1:30 PM
Big Pink

Dear Community,

The time is now to be heard. Join us at the Board of Supervisors Chambers, Room 330, Civic Center at 1:30 pm to speak to the legislation that can help protect our community from becoming over-run with short term rentals. Several West Marin housing groups have come together to support the following key items:

- 1) enacting an ordinance per the Santa Monica precedent already in effect in their Coastal Zone, requiring STR operators to have a permanent resident living on the property, in either an ADU (Accessory Dwelling Unit) or part of the main house, thereby creating residential units in all second homes being STR's; and
- 2) instituting an add-on to the TOT (Transient Occupancy Tax) that would be channeled directly to West Marin affordable housing as Sup. Rodoni has proposed: for example, increasing the TOT from 10% to 15% in unincorporated Marin would provide $1.6M/yr in revenue specifically for affordable housing in West Marin.
- 3) Require each STR to have a sign posted at the road that notifies the presence of a STR with contact info for the business/property owner.
- 4) Limit STR's to 90 days per year.

The meeting will be held in the Board of Supervisors Chambers, Room 330, Civic Center. Folks wanting to speak should check in when they arrive to see if they need to submit a speaker's card.

Whether you are able to attend or not, please submit written comments to the Board of Supervisors by E-mailing BOS@marincounty.org at the latest by 4pm the day before the meeting. Join others and carpool gifts to friends. He took art lessons with Kale Likover and he and Ms. Pearce would often meet for breakfast at the Parkside Café.

See you there,

"He always used to say, 'I truly believe in reinventing myself every five years,' and he really did," Ms. Pearce said. "I think that might be the key to longevity: to pick up a new thing. And that's pretty good advice from someone who called himself 'a pretty simple country boy.'"

Alan is survived by his partner of 45 years, Sadjia Greenwood; his daughter Sarah and his grandchildren Sonny and Asia. He is predeceased by his daughter Susan.

WHAT HAPPENED THIS WEEK
7-17-17 MONDAY MORNING MEMO
 Week in Review Recap from Jennie Pfeiffer

No Recap for July other than to say there was a large town turnout for the memorial for Herman Berlandt at the Bolinas Community Center. Herman was 93 years old when he died May 15 and lived a good many of those years in Bolinas. This celebration of his life chronicled much of that time, and as always happens at such events, many aspects of the life and times of the deceased were uncovered and I found out so many things it would have been interesting to know while he was still walking among us. I was happy to see Herman's two daughters and their lovely families. There was singing, socializing, and pot luck. Herman was relentless in pursuing his craft and his poetry, was voluminous and well represented yesterday. Copies of his many books were there for examination as well as photos of many poetical events depicting the well-known poets of the last half of the 20th century and the first decade of this one. Herman's most ambitious project, the building of a Poet's Museum in San Francisco, never quite made it to completion, but not for lack of enthusiasm and effort on Herman's part. Funding fell through at the last minute, so plans were put on hold. Maybe one day, in his honor it will happen.

A reminder: there is an impressive amount of art on exhibit around town and it's all worth a look. Kale Likover has a major amount of Crow work up at the Farmstand, Pam Fabry has work up in the Book Exchange and at the Library, Judy Molyneux is celebrating summer in her gallery, there is a group show of the work of Molly Brown's plant drawing class at the Stinson library, and the Art to Wear show in the Bolinas Museum, reminiscing about the Summer of Love, is delightful.

Well, this is certainly long for a non-column, so better stop.
