The Particle Kid

by StuArt

"The tribe is dying," a friend remarked as we observed the meager turnout for the Hearty Tardy Mardi Gras Parade. The numbers were down but the spirit was up, and we danced and drummed through downtown to the boat dock.

"Mardi Gras Bolinas Style. It's gonna be a little while. It's gonna be a little late. What's the hurry, let's celebrate. We'll dance and drum, parade through town. We'll get on up, and get on down. We'll get it on for quite some while. Mardi Gras Bolinas Style . . .

The parade of locals sang with me as I marched backwards and strummed my guitar. We were joined by an obvious out-of-towner, a young man with a knit cap and blue fingernails. "That's Willie Nelson's son," someone whispered to me.

We played and sang at the boat dock for a while, and then I offered my guitar to the guy and asked him his name.

"My name's Micah," he smiled, "My band is Particle Kid. We're playing at Smiley's tonight."

"What's the musical genre of your band?"

"They billed us as Psychedelic Folk Americana, rock and roll from outer space."

"Cool," I answered. "Play us a song."

"I'll sing our big hit," he said, then added, looking at the young children "Hope the kids don't mind the language."

Micah sang "Everything is Bullshit" a song about monkeys eating the mushrooms growing on cow patties and the subsequent evolution and de-evolution of human society. (The song is on youtube if you want to listen to it)

It was a great song. The next morning, feeling charged by Micah's unplugged performance, I wrote a different but similar song inspired by the rendezvous on the boat dock.

I titled the song "The Particle Kid" and in true "small town troubadour style" the song was a result of a particular set of occurrences that happened one Saturday afternoon in Bolinas.

"Repeat after me, and the Particle Kid . . ."

Frances McDormand Makes the Oscars Weird Again

by Michael Schulman,
The New Yorker, March 5, 2018

The other burst of spontaneity came from Frances McDormand, who gave the most memorable speech of the night. Up to and including her role in "Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri," for which she won her second Best Actress award, McDormand has made a career playing brash, unconventional, rough-hewn women. She's a true original who doesn't fit into any Hollywood archetype—even that of a grieving mother seeking justice. McDormand cuts into her characters like a chainsaw: no time for apologies, vanity, or small talk. She's like Hollywood's cool, eccentric aunt who does community theatre and sneaks you a joint on your birthday. A month before she was nominated for "Three Billboards," she was singing Shaker spirituals in a Wooster Group show in SoHo. Talk about marching on to the beat that you drum!

So who better to give this impolite year its defining Oscar moment? When she won, she hopped onstage, gave a tiny little lunge-kick, and shook the hand of the guy who brought out the statuette. Her hair was short yet unwieldy, and her dress looked repurposed from some weird drapes. She let out a nervous whinny-laugh and motor-mouthed, "O.K., so I'm hyperventilating a little bit. If I fall over, pick me up, 'cause I've got some things to say." By "things to say," she had slowed into an I-mean-business deadpan. Then: curveball! "I think this is what Chloe Kim must have felt like after doing back-to-back 1080s in the Olympic half-pipe. Did you see that?" Practically everyone had McDormand on an Oscar ballot, but no one predicted a snowboarding metaphor.

She thanked her director, Martin McDonagh: "We are a bunch of hooligans and anarchists, but we do clean up nice." She thanked her sister, Dorothy, and her "clan": her husband, Joel Coen, and their son, Pedro. "These two stalwart individuals were well raised by their feminist mothers," she said, making clear that she's a feminist mother par excellence. "They value each other, themselves, and those around them. I know you are proud of me, and that fills me with everlasting joy." If you didn't already want to spend a weeknight eating spaghetti and meatballs in the McDormand-Coen household, you do now.

Then, she informed us, it was time for "some perspective." She placed her Oscar on the floor and gave it a friendly tap on the head. Putting her hand to her chest, she asked all the female nominees to stand with her. ("Meryl, if you do it, everybody else will.") Up shot Greta Gerwig and Lesley Manville and Octavia Spencer and dozens of others, as McDormand let out another crazy laugh and yelled, "C'mon!" The room was utterly hers. "Look around, ladies and gentlemen," she continued, "because we all have stories to tell and projects we need financed. Don't talk to us about it at the parties tonight." She tapped a nonexistent wristwatch. "Invite us into your office in a couple days, or you can come to ours—whichever suits you best—and we'll tell you all about them." Did you hear that, money people?

Frances McDormand doesn't need your party talk. Get real.

She concluded, "I have two words to leave you with tonight, ladies and gentlemen: inclusion rider." Then she gave a brief little stare that said, "No, I'm not going to explain what that means—you're going to look it up, and you're going to like it." (An inclusion rider, as Stacy Smith explains in this TED Talk, is an equity clause for contracts that insures diversity on film sets.) With that, she picked up her Oscar, curtsied, and left.

IT SEEMS THEY MISSED THE FREE BOX

You may not know it but an Oscar winner spends most of her time here in the Bay Area. Actress Francis McDormand is becoming a regular in one North Bay town.

Bolinas might be as far away from Hollywood as you can get, no bling or glam here. But it's the right place for McDormand who local say, lives part-time here.

"You could swear she was a regular local, I've been at the gas station and saw her and not sure who it was then I said hey -- that's Frances," said resident Matt Lundy.

McDormand won the Oscar Sunday night for best actress in "Three Billboards outside Ebbing, Missouri."

Bolinas locals say they run into McDormand all the time.

"I treat her just like a normal person because she is a normal person who just happens to be a really skilled actress," said Jason Peacock, who works at a local health food store.

He says McDormand is a regular customer. Many say McDormand is more than just a part-time resident. She faithfully volunteers her time to a local land trust which finds affordable housing for people.

"She really cares, something you would not expect from someone with that kind of prestige and money, she's OK in my book," said Matt Lundy.

La Mesa de Las Abuelas

Sunday evening at the school: La Mesa de Las Abuelas (the Table of the Grandmothers) a wonderful cross-cultural dinner to celebrate Grandmothers and their family recipes and to bring together the Spanish-speaking and the English-speaking people of Bolinas.

A bunch of tables were set for dinner in the assembly room of the Quesada building. Latinos and Gringos were seated together at each table. A delicious potluck dinner was followed by "schoolwork" in Español y Ingles.

Three questions were asked:

"What dish did you bring?"

"What brought you to Bolinas?"

"What skill do you bring to our community?"

Everyone had an assignment: answer each question in English and Spanish. For example I told the story of the dish I had brought: Grandma's gravy and mashed potatoes Yo traje la salsa marron de mi abuela y papas molidos con crema Mexicana. (translation: I brought my Grandmother's brown gravy and mashed potatoes with sour cream.)

Hector was seated next to me. We laughed a lot. He would tease the gringo in me, and I would turn to him when I needed a few Spanish words.

I asked Hector for a word of encouragement that I could shout out. He suggested the word chingón. He said it was Spanish word for "right on"

I knew that the word "chinga" meant "fuck" in Spanish and I assumed Hector was teasing me again. Later when I looked up the meaning of the word I found:

chingón (Mexico, colloquial) someone or something that is cool, awesome and very good.

Hector would laugh whenever I shouted out the word chingón and I knew it was a "dirty word" that would never be used in the company of grandmothers. Nevertheless I would occasionally shout it out just to tease Hector.

There were sad moments at the dinner. People spoke about not being able to return to Mexico because of their immigration status.

One friend of mine spoke in Spanish about not being able to visit her home for 15 years. When I expressed my sympathy she answered:

"Mi corazon es quebrada but fuerte" (My heart is broken but strong)

"La Mesa de las Abuelas" was a total success bringing the two cultures together. It was living proof that:

"Estamos todos juntos en el mismo bote."

We're all together in the same boat.

¡Resiste in solidaridad!
