A Reminiscence of #9 Brighton

By Margot Patterson Doss (Excerpted), 1998

(In tribute to John Doss, MD, RIP)

Three times during our 30-year ownership of #9, the tide has come up in the basement. Not sewage but seawater. There are photos that were published in the Independent Journal and the Point Reyes Light, of tenants leaving the front steps of #9 via canoe. Given three days of rain at the time of the new or the full moon, flooding can easily happen downtown if trash is chucked into the culvert at Brighton Avenue and Wharf Road. One time a cast-off mattress caused flooding. Another flood happened in 1983. We were in Samoa at the time and only learned of it from news reports. The El Nino of '98 flood was severe. Water covered the bottom three steps of the Presbyterian church next door.

Primitive plumbing under Brighton Avenue undoubtedly contributed to the Bolinas infectious hepatitis epidemic of 1970. The vector case happened to be a tenant at the house called Topside at the beach end of Brighton located on the stairs that cut up to Terrace Avenue.

Dr Doss's experience in the Epidemic Intelligence Service of the U. S. Communicable Disease Center, made it accepted procedure for him to pinpoint the location of the cases. There were seven or eight cases of infectious hepatitis (including me) along Brighton Avenue.

This indicated faulty water mains. Sure enough, osmosis and leakage from sewer to water lines was evident when the U. S. sanitarians checked it out. As a prudent housewife, from there on, I bought bottled water for many years. Unlike the present time attitude, in 1970 Bolinas merchants were eager for tourists and resented the doctor reporting (as he was required by law to do) the hepatitis cases that came through his office.

John and I had booked a cruise aboard the APL ship SS President Cleveland to Alaska long before the epidemic, and since we were then unaware that I too, was a victim, sailed as scheduled. When the ship put in to Vancouver, we called our four sons to see how they were faring in our absence.

The boys reported they had been wakened that morning by friends who said, "Hey you guys, come down to the Community Center. They've hanged your Dad in effigy on the flagpole."

Sandy and Jock, two of our sons, hurried around the corner to see. Sure enough, a figure representing the lost tourist business and labeled Dr. Doss was dangling with a sign from the flagpole. A grinning crowd surrounded it. Verne Bradley, owner of Smiley's bar at the time, sidled over and asked Sandy "What do you think your old man would think of this?"

Sandy was always a cool, self-possessed young man. He looked Bradley in the eye unflinchingly and said, "I think my old man would dig it."

Then the grinning effigy-hangers couldn't get the figure down off the flagpole fast enough. Jock barely had time to get a photograph. Mel Wax, a journalist friend who then had a program on KQED, arranged for the station to make a presentation of the Ibsen play An Enemy of the People, which dramatizes a similar episode on the other side of the world.

Performance and Conversation with Michael Lerner

Bob Holman is an American poet and poetry activist, most closely identified with the oral tradition, the spoken word, and slam poetry. As a promoter of poetry in many media, Holman has spent the last four decades working variously as an author, editor, publisher, performer, emcee of live events, director of theatrical productions, producer of films and television programs, record label executive, university professor, poet's house proprietor, and archivist.

Dubbed "Ringmaster of the Spoken Word" (NY Daily News), "Poetry Czar" (Village Voice), and "Dean of the Scene" (Seventeen Magazine), he studied poetry at Columbia where he now teaches: he finds it fulfilling, becoming the guy he used to laugh at (he also teaches at NYU).

Dear Beloved Bolinas,

What a wonderful party!!!, Nov. 10th, (to raise funds for our past-due bills for when I was in the hospital and Magi could not work, as he stayed with me). First of all, we thank Perry Hooper for making all those phone calls & getting it "all together"!!! Then we thank our Great Bolinas Community Center, the veritable "heart" of our town, for providing a space for such a special (and thoughtful) event! Many thanks to Lia & Randi for running our BCC so efficiently. Thanks to all those helping hands from Jen Meyer, who did "the door" and the flower bouquets with my daughter, Signy. Jill Field (Bo Nursery) who donated ALL the lovely flowers herself, plus the gardenias (donated by Bq Nursery). Thanks to Lou Commons for being the Hostess & Speller for Jen, and Jeff, her husband, for being the "M.C.". Thanks to Suzanne. Bartlome for her stunning arrangement above the fireplace, & Don Smith for providing a fire, in the fireplace, plus HOURS on all the lighting and Zim Caroselli for all the stage decorations. Special thanks for all the FANTASTIC music all night long! And for all the faithful Bar keepers ! Magi & I are most GRATEFUL for "lightening our load" at this time and for all the wonderful combined energy of the volunteers and entertainers.

Mary & Magi

Dear Mr. Obama,

If I were president, I would tell people to not talk too much. It wastes time.

I would give the poor people more money so they don't have to look for food in the trash can. I would also give them a house. I'd work really hard so I could buy them a house and give them more food.

If I were the president, you wouldn't have to pay rent. When you go to the store, you wouldn't have to pay for sure!

I'd also say to war: no more, no more, no more!

SALLY was driving home from one of her business trips in Northern Arizona when she saw an elderly Navajo woman walking on the side of the road. As the trip was a long and quiet one, she stopped the car and asked the Navajo woman if she would like a ride. With a silent nod of thanks, the woman got into the car. Resuming the journey, Sally tried in vain to make a bit of small talk with the Navajo woman. The old woman just sat silently, looking intently at everything she saw, studying every little detail, until she noticed a brown bag on the seat next to Sally. "What in bag?" asked the old woman. Sally looked down at the brown bag and said, 'It's a bottle of wine. I got it for my husband.' The Navajo woman was silent for another moment or two. Then speaking with the quiet wisdom of an elder, she said: 'Good trade!'

DANNY VITALI & BRIAN LAIDLAW

Local musician, Danny Vitali, and Minneapolis-based songwriter, Brian Laidlaw with a grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board are producing a new album called Echolalia. The album re-imagines the myth of Echo and Narcissus in the mining town of Hibbing, Minnesota, and draws inspiration from the high-school relationship that took place there between Bob Dylan and Echo Helstrom (a.k.a. "The Girl From the North Country"). With Laidlaw's incisive lyrics and Vitali's expansive musical arrangements, the duo's sound has echoes of Simon and Garfunkel, Leonard Cohen, and of course, Dylan himself. Vitali, a former resident of Hibbing, has been making music with Laidlaw for the last two years; this will be their second album together. The album is set for release this winter, this is a very special pre-release performance.

Richard Brautigan and Bolinas
Skip Moore

Last Sunday was a beautiful day in the San Francisco Bay Area. We decided to take a drive out to Bolinas. It wasn't until we were rounding the bend into this throwback California coastal town that I realized this was once Richard's home. I hadn't been back to Bolinas since the late 70's, so the realization was new to me. I had made it about halfway through William Hjortsberg's epic "Jubilee Hitchhiker" before I put it down for a rest, and here we were in the midst of where so much of the story comes down.

After a walk along the length of the beach, letting the late October sun and stunning Pacific vistas melt away our urban attitudes, we made our way back into town along Brighton Avenue. That's when the haunting began, like sensing there is someone looking over your shoulder only to glance back quickly to find there's nobody there. I knew we were close. I spotted a bookstore next to the Post Office and walked in seeking advice for my condition by seeking directions to Richard's house. The shelves were stuffed with used books, musty in their intellectual promise. Music played in a nearby poetry room. An empty rocking chair tilted to and fro on the wooden porch. Nobody to be found. The ghosts of my trepidation continued to haunt me.

Further down the road I spotted an old sign reading "Grand Hotel", small lightbulbs dotting the interior of the aged black letters. Below that was a more humble invitation, "Shop and Gallery", surrounded by windows stocked with stuff mined from the Forgotten Works, the lawn scattered with the remnants of prior possessions. I made my way in to find the aged proprietor in conversation with a visitor. I introduced myself as a fan of Richard Brautigan. After I thanked him and turned to go, seeking spirits beyond my vision, he mentioned that Richard owed him $8. When I offered to pay it, he laughed and said at least 5 people already had.

Rather than turning back from where we had come, back toward the house that now had a place, near where I first felt that haunting feeling, we walked down Wharf Road to another old haunt, Smiley's Schooner Saloon. I had a stiff drink, played a game of pool and watched the locals converge to watch the upcoming World Series game on the color television. With the light outside fading, it was time to go. I forgot to ask the bartender if Richard owed him money too.

There were a couple of cars in the driveway, so I cautiously approached, past the formidable barrier of overgrown bushes, the storied house slowly revealing itself to my eyes. I looked up to the top floor, down to the middle floor and was overwhelmed with the tragedy flooding my soul. I retreated, no longer interested in seeking ghosts I could never be strong enough to know.

Driving out of town, we took a left on Mesa Road to take in the sunlit fog slowly splashing against the grassy hills and the sun settling into the mist farther out into the western world. I sought to cleanse my conscience of the frightful phantom images staining my view. It helped. Later, heading back into the twilight of southern Marin County, I realized that the house, that house, is every bit as much a character in Mr. Hjortsberg's account as any person described. I also realized that one should not go unprepared when seeking the ghost of our heroes.

TELLING TAILS

Is your pup happy ... or plotting trouble? Here are scientists' best guesses at the secret language of tails.

AGGRESSION
Beware of any tail that's wagging a little too high and stiff.

UNCERTAINTY
A tail wagging low and rapidly can indicate confusion.

RECOGNITION
Tails wag more to the right when dogs recognize someone.

CAUTION

PURSUIT
Lively whisking means your dog is in pursuit of a ball or smell.

JOY
Look for a tail drawing rough arcs in the air above the dog's body.

The Bolinas Land Trust in 2012

GUEST REPORT BY LESA KRAMER

The annual meeting of the Bolinas Community Land Trust (BCLT) was held on October 24, coinciding with the first game of the World Series, so this update is for our West Marin friends that couldn't attend.

At annual meetings we share our yearly progress in providing affordable housing with our community and hold elections for our board members. I'm delighted to announce that in addition to re-electing Don Deane, Leo Kostelnik, Megan Matson and Gail Reitano, the membership nominated and elected Alethea Patton and Mechelle Cattell.

Before beginning, we hosted an informational presentation by Carmen Soruco from Marin Housing's Residential Rehabilitation Loan Program, which offers low-interest property improvement loans and technical assistance to lower-income homeowners in Marin County for necessary home repairs. Ms. Soruco explained the process of applying for the simple interest 5 percent per annum loan (maximum term of 15 years) and her willingness to provide assistance with the loan process and repairs, including helping with the permitting process and locating contractors. This loan opportunity was a terrific way to start our annual meeting, as the BCLT is aware that we have many low-income homeowners in West Marin who have deferred maintenance issues that could be solved through this program, including upgrading homes for ADA needs, dealing with mold and termites, and many other issues. Making homes safe is the goal of this program. To receive information, contact Marin Housing at (415) 491.2550.

Our organization then proceeded to update members on our yearly accomplishments and future goals—too much information to share here, so I am only going to touch on a few of the highpoints and encourage you to visit our website for more information, at www.bolinaslandtrust.org.

Board secretary Gail Reitano made the announcement of our recent recognition at the National Community Land Trust Convention held this past September in Vermont (special thank you to Kim Thompson, executive director of the Community Land Trust of West Marin, or CLAM, who attended and was able to share the news with us). The BCLT was featured in the session "CLTs and Commercial Stewardship" for our mixed-use, transit-oriented model, by presenter Michael Brown from Burlington Associates. Mr. Brown shared this quote for our meeting: "I was delighted to learn about your Bo-Gas property and the accompanying commercial bays in the buildings you own along the lovely Main Street, Wharf Road, of Bolinas. In many ways, you all are ahead of the curve nationally... I was pleased to learn of your commitment and your success, not only because it addresses a critical market need for Bolinas and its residents but because it also provides a precedent that I—and the rest of the CLT world—can point to, showing a working example of what is possible. Congratulations."

Ms. Reitano profusely thanked former board presidents Bruce Bowser and Richard Pfeiffer, and current treasurer Don Deane, who were part of the team that bravely forged the purchases of our two properties, and concluded with acknowledging our "secret sauce"—a community willing to support our mission of affordable housing.

I proudly presented the success of our new internship program. The BCLT recognizes that there are very few professional opportunities for young people in Bolinas. The outcome has been wonderful, as our interns learn new skills, and the BCLT benefits from their enthusiasm and deep interest in serving their community. We have had three interns to date, and are actively recruiting to expand the program, which includes a paid stipend.

I also welcomed our two new locally owned commercial tenants, Om Gardens and Tamalpais Surf Club, which join Boholicious Smoothie Lounge and together with Bo-Gas, create a vibrant downtown district for locals and visitors alike. We also held a moment of silence to remember our longtime friend and tenant, Judith Elliott of Judith's Herbals.

In addition, we reviewed our fiscals and shared that thanks to good management and a very tight budget, we expect a small profit from Bo-Gas to help supplement our income stream, thus allowing us to keep our tenant rents from increasing.

Importantly, we talked about the quality of our 24 tenants (living in 15 dwellings), all low-income local workforce and families that have truly helped the BCLT transform downtown Bolinas into a family-friendly destination. Bolinas, like all of our West Marin villages, is the home of diversity. We receive national publicity for visits by a prince and president and the sale of water meters, yet it is the fisherman and artisans, the young families and local workers (many of whom have multiple jobs) who define our village and have consistently made Bolinas a better place to live, work and raise a family.

I have proudly served as the part time executive director since 2006. With an amazing support team, we continue to grow our organization, but we could never have these wonderful accomplishments without our secret sauce—our community. Thank you for making 2012 a fantastic year.

Enchanted by the Sun: The CoEvolution of Light, Life, and Color on Earth

Wednesday, November 28, 2012 from 7:30 PM to 9:00 PM (PST)

For 3.8 billion years, life has lived in a bath of solar radiance. The Sun's illumination outlines which objects are appealing, bland, or repellant. Its powers of desiccation, blistering, bleaching, and revelation govern a balance between beauty and danger. Its flood of photons shapes light-harvesters ("eyes"), pigments, and surfaces--- stretching planetary aesthetics to include "invisible light" (ultraviolet, infrared, and polarized). From euglena to Matisse, all creatures dwell in a variety of luminance locales---dramas of biospheric brightness, color mixes, and rebellions against darkness (such as fireflies and luminescent fish). The most recent rebellion has been human-devised lamps that impact everything from the artistic-military complex (camouflage and mimicry) to the materials, techniques, and display of paintings, electronic imaging, and growing plants.

This 55-minute journey travels from unicells to octopi to op-art, with a dose of PR for "planetary color webs" and their influence on awareness, desire, self-direction, memory, contemplation, and curiosity.

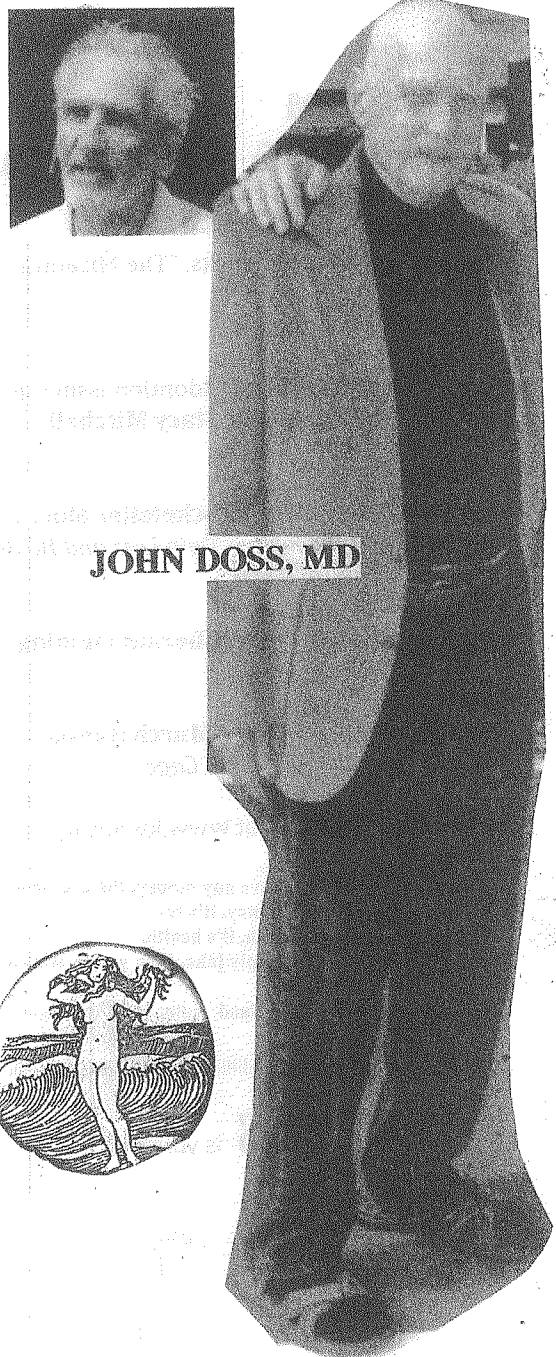

Armed with a PhD in Biological Anthropology from Harvard, Peter Warshall has shaped watershed theory and practices, conservation biology, relations with Indian tribes in the Southwest, and refugee activities in Africa. For a decade he was the editor of the Whole Earth Review.

SPIRIT HOUSE

It's the time of year to gather together 7 people who are willing to tend the Spirit House for 2013. Each tender cleans and decorates the space about every two months. The space is tended every week including providing flowers or a centerpiece and watering the living plants and tree there. This is a great gift to ourselves and the community. Call June @ 9052 or email me at junemcadams@gmail.com if you are able to be part of this team. Thanks, June McAdams
