Inaccuracies in the media are nothing new, especially when they originate from corporate or military interests. But the current "fake news" era seems to have amplified the art of distortion, bluster, propaganda, and outright lying. The recent Ken Burns documentary series on the Vietnam War highlighted the pervasive use of falsehoods intended to fool the American public. For the good of all, what might be done to lessen this pervasive problem? Join Peter and TNS host Steve Hellig for a discussion of how we might clear the real fog of fake news.

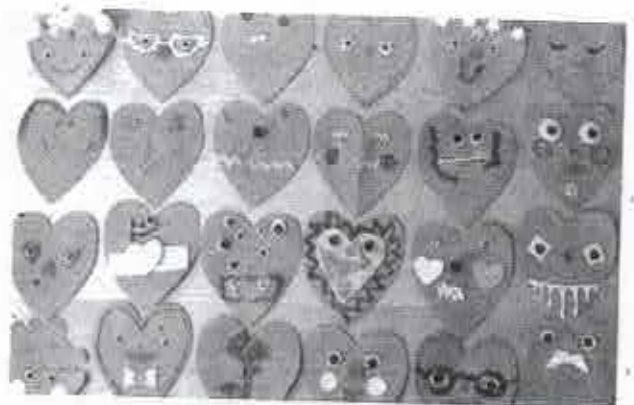

Peter Coyote first became politically active in his college years in the 1960s in an anti-nuclear protest that brought him to Kennedy's White House during the Cuban Missile Crisis. From there he came west to become an integral part of the San Francisco Mime Troupe and then the Dogma, the lowest anarchist school of the Haight-Asbury street scene, followed by a period as a commune in Olena. His first book Shaping Words: I Fall included a Pulitzer Prize-winning chapter, and his new memoir, The Salmagundi Third Course: It's a candid and revealing peeking with his childhood and subsequent life. He has recently been ordained as a Buddhist priest.

Reconstruction and Recovery: The Post-Civil War South (8 week class) Old Dixie was shocked and humiliated by her unexpected defeat at the hands of the detested Yankees. Incredibly, "The Chivalry" had been beaten by soulless, materialistic Northerners. How would the loyal sons and daughters of the Confederacy react to the Unthinkable? Carry on the struggle, or join the modern world and create a commercial, urban culture where cotton and sugar cane once grew? This class will trace the moral and political struggle post-war Southerners faced in the wake of utter ruin,

To whom it may concern.
 The United States Park service has been spraying Roundup in the park to eradicate so called non-native species, and one of those species is the eucalyptus tree. Has anyone has noticed the large dead grove of eucalyptus trees about a half a mile up Ridge Crest Blvd. just above the Lagoon Road above highway one? As an eyewitness of the Park Service pumping a liquid from a large tank in the back of a pick up truck through hose the size of a firehose uphill into the eucalyptus Grove it is my belief that Roundup is the culprit. They were not just spraying a small amount of Roundup. The tank in the back of the truck was approximately 500 gallons. When I stopped to ask a woman park ranger who was spraying Roundup from a small backpack pump on plants along the roadside, she said they were spraying a special formula of Roundup that is allowed by the Park service. A loophole used by the Park service. Roundup has been proven to cause cancer in humans and causes many side affects in the natural world such as mutations in amphibians and other animals including marine life.
 What it all boils down to is the chemical is poisonous to the natural world and it needs to be abolished! Round up is used to grow round up ready crops which are genetically modified organisms, GMO's in conventional agriculture. Please contact your local county supervisor to help ban this awful chemical from our environment and our food.

Serra himself communicates by snail mail, so the image having gone viral must have been particularly amazing to him. In one day, he said via email, there were 580 calls from all over the country. "Many threatened violence, but the majority were sympathetic to our view. Nonetheless, we had to shut off our office phones because we were swamped." The message on the sign: "Pier 5 Law Office says F— Trump and his Nazi Friends."

The Summer of Reflection and The New School

by Steve Heilig, MPH,
New School Host

This past summer there was much hoopla in the San Francisco area and beyond surrounding the 50th anniversary of the 1967 "Summer of Love"—that brief but fabled season when the funky Haight-Ashbury district blossomed as the world center of hippiedom, involving not only unprecedented amounts of hair but also peace, love, sex, drugs, and rock and roll. Some of that trickled over the famous bridge to the little coastal hamlet of Bolinas, which was to become the home of Commonwealth and the New School (TNS).

Those local cultural eruptions have long since faded, and some of it was to appear silly in retrospect. New School guest Peter Coyote, one of the founders of the anarchistic Haight group the Diggers, in fact later called the whole Summer of Love concept a media-generated farce, commercialized and trivialized for mass consumption.

"There were a lot of people who were putting their lives on the line to make change, and you would think everyone was just going to rock and roll shows and wearing bell-bottom pants," he recently lamented.

But, undeniably, the ferment of the 1960s did mark a much broader mass phenomenon with many facets. The vaunted but ill-defined "revolution" didn't quite arrive overall, but some of the most important and progressive movements of our time can be traced to the sixties: civil rights, environmentalism, feminism, gay rights, healthcare for all, organic eating and living, anti-war/peace/"no nukes," and the trend towards liberalizing drug laws, to name eight big ones. All of these have had profound if mixed impacts in the subsequent decades. Most Americans, again to varying degrees, feel these have been positive changes.

But it is undeniable that most, if not all, of these movements are now the subjects of a concerted backlash. Many have remarked that "Make America Great Again" seems to harken to the 1950s, before all the movements above really got underway.

The great historian Arnold Toynbee once said, "The coming of Buddhism to the West may well prove to be the most important event of the Twentieth Century." He may have been overly optimistic, but time will tell. In the meantime, listen to some TNS talks, like those of Zen master Shoda Harada Roshi, for some timeless wisdom.

Quite a few of the talks we have been privileged to present at TNS in recent times have addressed "alternative" movements from the 1960s to varying degrees. Drs. Sadjia Greenwood and Anna O'Malley on health rights, especially of women and of communities. Dr. David Smith on the free clinic movement and his landmark lasting slogan, "healthcare is a right, not a privilege." Michael Pollan and Don Lattin on the resurgence of psychedelic research. Our community reading from American ecology pioneer Henry David Thoreau's journal. The late great Joanne Kyger's indelible Zen and green poetry. Many conversations related to Commonwealth's own focus on what has long been called a "holistic" approach to healing cancer and other diseases. And then there's Dennis McNally (not incidentally long associated with the Grateful Dead) talking about American music's evolution, and living folk legend Ramblin' Jack Elliot (who actually lived and played the evolution). In the sixties, music was central.

It has been a joy to recall and reflect with these guests on hard lessons learned. Already, by the end of the sixties, a sense of looming apocalypse had grown, exemplified by Nixon's presidency and the horrors and failures of the Vietnam War. "It's true that the free lifestyle is unsustainable, but it doesn't mean you have to give up your values," Coyote now says. "Most of our kids became nurses, healers, doctors, and environmentalists, and I'm really proud of them," he says. The good tends to survive the bad eras, at least in some form.

As many wise TNS speakers have counseled, take your hope and inspiration where you can find it. Take care of yourself. And then, if you can and are so inclined, get to work.

Find out more at tns.commonweal.org. TNS would not be possible without the support of Bet Lev Foundation, West Marin Fund, The Whitman Institute, and individual contributions from TNS supporters like you.
