MANIFESTO

A PRESS RELEASE FROM PRKA

GEORGE SAUNDERS

Now it can be told.

Last Thursday, my organization, People Reluctant To Kill For An Abstraction (PRKA), orchestrated an overwhelming show of force around the globe.

At precisely nine in the morning, working with focus and stealth, our entire membership succeeded in simultaneously beheading no one. At nine thirty, we embarked upon Phase II, during which our entire membership simultaneously did not force a single man to simulate sex with another man. At ten, Phase III began, during which not a single one of us blew himself/herself up in a crowded public place. No civilians were literally turned inside out via our powerful explosives. No previously funny person was reduced to a baggy pile of bloody leaking flesh, by us, during this Phase of our operation. In addition, at eleven, in Phase IV, zero (0) planes were flown into buildings.

All of this was accomplished so surreptitiously, it attracted little public notice.

During Phase V, just after lunch, while continuing to avoid the activities listed above, we were able to avoid bulldozing a single home. Furthermore, we set, on roads in every city, in every nation in the world, a total of zero (0) roadside bombs, which, not being there, did not subsequently explode, killing/maiming a total of nobody.

"I know San Rafael very well from my flower-child days," says South African trumpet legend, composer, bandleader, author and political activist Hugh Masekela. "Sure, and Mill Valley and Sausalito and, what do you call it, Bolinas. I used to play at concerts and anti-Vietnam War demonstrations on Mt. Tamalpais. I know the area very well."

"I have very many pleasant hallucinatory memories about [Marin]," he adds with a hearty laugh.

When I was in art school in Mexico I had the good fortune to work with peyote. I found that peyote grew in abundance in the high desert six hours north of San Miguel de Allende.

Although I was studying for my MFA at the Instituto Allende and taking classes with various professors I considered peyote to be my true teacher. I spent many nights taking peyote and painting under its beneficent influence.

Before I left Mexico I had the experience of becoming a peyote button. I remember distinctly waking up snuggled in the earth underneath a greasewood bush and watching the sun come up over the distant mountains as it had for eons. I know I left a piece of me back there in the desert. Even now in the early spring peyote flowers and I hear it singing to me.

This year Beth gave me a round table. She was putting it in the Freebox but instead asked me if I wanted it. I said sure, not certain what I would do with it.

Then I heard peyote's song and I decided to paint a big flowering peyote button on the table. It was just a whim, but then I realized I had created a peyote mesa, a sacred table for communion with the spirit of peyote and the planet.

I'll have the peyote mesa at Art & Garden, and lead plant seances at various times during the weekend. Come join with me and experience true Plant Magic.

There's no need to ingest substances. All that's required is an open mind and humility. We'll flower together.

Meadowfoam Heaven Larner Seeds Open House Saturday, April 20, 12 to 4pm.

When I moved to Bolinas 35 years ago, I learned that the Mesa had once been a series of vernal pools and seasonally wet areas, where special plants grew. I always wondered what those plants were.

Further north, on the Pt Reyes/Petaluma Road, magnificent spring displays of the annual wildflower called Meadowfoam still thrived in seasonally wet areas.

Once, I ventured into such a field and was severely reprimanded by the owner. Shamefaced, I apologized, but in my pocket I kept a few of the seeds I had picked from the thousands of plants in that field.

Shortly after, that field, which had been managed so that silage could be cut while wildflowers still could flourish, was sold, and the new owner's land-use strategies ended the growth of meadowfoam in that field.

However, the meadowfoam seed I put in my pocket has thrived here in our Demonstration Garden, a small but continually expanding memorial to that last flowerfield in West Marin. Come see it. And a lot else! At the

KIT WALKER &amp; MARIANA INGOLD

This coming together of two original musical beings, has given birth to a new sound, a healing and life-affirming journey into a new world of music, both grounded and spacious, earthy and transcendent. Mariana Ingold is a composer, instrumentalist, singer, teacher and key contributor to the movement of Uruguayan music. Mariana was born into a musical family and has been active professionally as an artist since 1977 in Uruguay and internationally. Keyboard innovator Kit Walker thrives on new musical horizons. Although he was in his early years classically trained as a pianist, pipe organist, and composer, Kit wasn't content to stop there. His groundbreaking albums for Windham Hill Jazz, helped to broaden the spectrum of contemporary jazz.

Earth Day on Stinson Beach
Honor the Earth by Making Art in Collaboration With Nature - Ninth Annual Event - 4/20, 11-3

Using sand, rocks, seaweed, and natural objects from the beach, join in and create a vast, temporary, multi-element, site-specific sculpture - with no predetermined plan. In past years, beachgoers stacked rock towers, made spirals from seaweed, planted a forest of "trees" made of driftwood, and created dragons, fairies, and abstract designs.

Environmental artist Zach Pine (in partnership with Samavesha) will host this "9th Annual Free Public Create-With-Nature Earth Day Celebration on Stinson Beach."

Musicians, dancers, and other artists also participate in the event, inviting collaborative expression in service to the earth. The public is invited to bring along small percussion instruments such as shakers, bells, or palm-sized drums to join in the musical creation.

The site at the south end of Stinson Beach is special because of the diversity of natural materials and microenvironments it offers: boulders, a wide variety of stones, tide pools, seaweed, driftwood, feathers, and sea glass.

Photographs of past years' events are on the event website; images from this year's event will be exhibited as well.

Event details:

Saturday April 20, 2011, no need to register; drop in any time between 11 am and 3 pm; event starts with beach clean-up; south end of Stinson Beach; free; all

BODYCAST-ED

Last Sunday there was a private presentation at Commonweal of a work-in-progress titled "Bodycast." Performed by longtime friends writer/painter/sculptress Susan Bocanegra and actor Frances McDormand, it was billed as "A story about beauty, small town Texas, orthopedic surgery and classical sculpture." Knowing little-to-nothing about any of those things, it seemed smart to show up and learn, albeit without any expectations.

The performance piece is hard to describe in words. Bocanegra writes of her experience with scoliosis, a condition where one's spine is painfully malformed, often into a sort of "s" shape. She was in a full body cast to correct the condition as an adolescent, an already-awkward time of life, and tells of how that experience helped form her psyche and art(s). The two friends perform it together, Bocanegra reading the text quietly and McDormand "inhabiting" it, with slides and film on the wall behind her; it's a hybrid of theatre, essay, and multimedia, and the audience hears both voices - a bit disorienting at first for me, but then seemingly "normal," even, or perhaps especially, when McDormand had to ask Bocanegra to "back up" or slow down. With two such skilled artists, the hour-plus long performance was engrossing; moving at times, funny at others, sometimes both, in ways I'd not quite experienced before.

"Bodycast" is off a sort of tour of some hoity-toity performance spaces/museums/galleries around the nation, but McDormand told me they do want to bring it to Bolinas in an open performance when the time is right. If this preview for Commonweal's major donors was any indication, that will be a highly-recommended event. Stay tuned.

No bombs, cluster bombs, or rockets were launched into crowded civilian neighborhoods, from which, it was observed; no post-bomb sickening momentary silences could be heard. These silences were, in all cases, followed by no unimaginable, grief-stricken bellows of rage and loss. No sleeping babies were awakened from sleep by the sudden collapse and/or bursting into flame of his/her domicile, followed by the tortured screams of his/her family members, during Phase V.

In the early afternoon (Phase VI), our membership focused on using zero (0) trained dogs to bite/terrorize naked prisoners. In addition, no stun guns, rubber batons, rubber bullets, tear gas, or real bullets were used, by our membership, on any individual, anywhere in the world. No one was forced to don a hood. No teeth were pulled in darkened rooms. Drills were not used on human flesh, nor were whips or flames. No one was reduced to hysterical tears via a series of blows to the head or body, by us. Our membership, while casting no racial or ethnic aspersions, skillfully continued not to rape, gang-rape, or sexually assault a single person. On the contrary, during this afternoon phase, many of our membership engaged in tender loving sexual acts, flirted happily, and even consoled, in a nonsexual way, individuals to whom they were attracted, putting aside their sexual feelings out of a sudden welling of empathy.

As night fell, our membership harbored no secret feelings of rage or hatred or, if they did, prayed, meditated, or discussed these feelings with a friend, until such time as the feelings abated, or were understood to be symptomatic of some deeper sadness, at which time they made silent promises to continue to struggle with these feelings.

It should be noted that, in addition to the above-listed and planned activities completed by our members, a number of unplanned activities were completed, by part-time members, or even nonmembers.

In Chitral, Pakistan, for example, a new Al Qaeda recruit remembered an elderly American woman who had once made him laugh with a snide remark about an ugly lampshade, and the way that, as she made the remark, she touched his arm, like a mother. In Gaza, an Israeli soldier and a young Palestinian exchanged a brief look of mutual shame. In London, a bitter homophobic grandfather whose grocery bag broke open gave a loaf of very nice bread to a balding gay man who stopped to help him. A stooped toothless woman in Tokyo pounded her head with her hands, tired beyond belief of her life-long feelings of anger and negativity, and silently prayed that her heart would somehow miraculously be opened before it was too late. In Syracuse, New York, holding the broken body of his kitten, a man wept.

Who are we? A word about our membership.

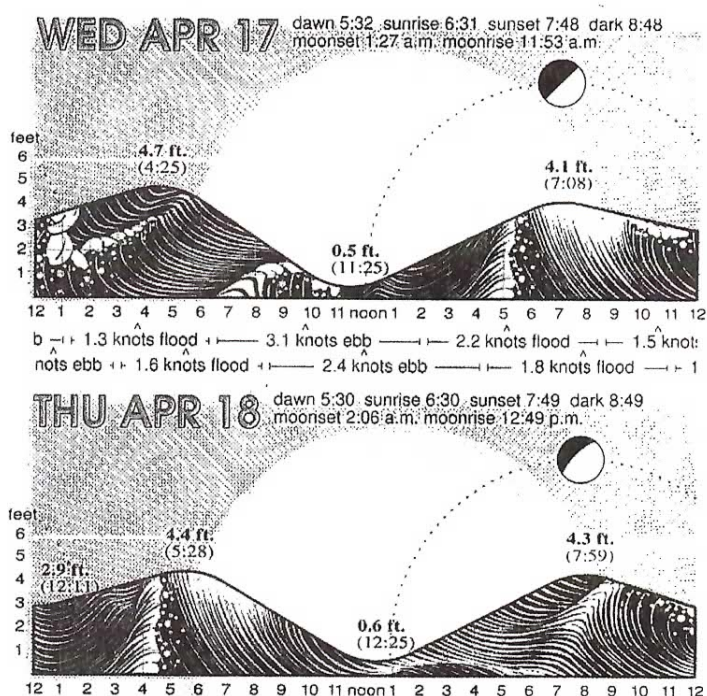

Since the world began, we have gone about our work quietly, resisting the urge to generalize, insisting upon valuing the individual over the group, the actual over the conceptual, the inherent sweetness of a peaceful moment over the theoretically peaceful future supposedly to be obtained via murder or massacre. Many of us have trouble sleeping, and lie awake at night, worrying about something catastrophic befalling someone we love. We rise in the morning with no plans to convert anyone via beating, humiliation, murder, or invasion. To tell the truth, we are tired. We work. We would just like some peace and quiet. When wrong, we think about it awhile, then apologize. We stand under awnings during urban thunderstorms, moved to thoughtfulness by the beautiful, troubled, umbrella-tinged faces rushing by. In moments of crisis, we pat one another awkwardly on the back, mumbling shy truisms. Rushing to an appointment, remembering a friend who has passed away, our eyes well with tears and we think: Well, my God, I was lucky just to have known him.

This is us. This is who we are. This is PRKA. To those who would oppose us, I would simply say: We are many. We are worldwide. We, in fact, outnumber you. Though you are louder, though you create a momentary ripple on the water of life, we will endure, and prevail.

Join us.

Resistance is futile.

Wild Geese

By Marv Oliver

You do not have to be good.

You do not have to walk on your knees for a hundred miles through the desert repenting.

You only have to let the soft animal of your body love what it loves.

Tell me about despair, yours and I will tell you mine.

Meanwhile the world goes on.

Meanwhile the sun and the clear pebbles of the rain are moving across the landscapes,
over the prairies and the deep trees,

the mountains and the rivers.

Meanwhile the wild geese, high in the clean blue air, are heading home again.

Whoever you are, no matter how lonely,

the world offers itself to your imagination,

calls to you like the wild geese, harsh and exciting –
over and over announcing your place in the family of things.

In memory of my friend Liz.
