There, at the tip, of the Point Reyes Peninsula
There, what a trip, at the tip of the Peninsula.
Won't say its name
or explain, how to get there
But when we,
reach that point,
pass the...
And we'll all get there
together... together,
Together... together we sing
What we got is good and plenty Way down here
around 4:20.
Life is simple
and so sweet
Hanging out, on the beach
with you.
Earth, water and sun
music, laughter and fun
We have just begun
we have just begun the fun
the fun, the fun...

...a socially-acknowledged nature-loving town, because to like to drink the water out of the lakes to like to eat the blueberries to like the bears is not hatred to hotels and motor boats, Dakar. Temporary and way to save life, boats and fairs (airplanes to go over the ocean) and to make it beautiful.

The Art and Garden fundraiser for the Bolinas Community Center is only two weeks away. This year, the focus is on honoring and learning about the flora and fauna that has inhabited this place – Bolinas, west of west, before we second people arrived – a community as old as the hills.

To honor these plant and animal ancestors, we have decided to hold an All Species parade followed by a maypole dance (in costume!) in the downtown park on Sunday, May 1st. This is a shout out to all children, elders, costume makers, mask makers, dancers, musicians, clowns & actors to lend your talents and energy to make this an event we can tell our grandchildren about. What is your inner animal? Is it a Dusky Footed Wood Rat? A Black Tailed Mule Deer? Maybe a Golden Crowned Sparrow? What is your totem plant? Yerba Buena? Coyote Bush? Blue – eyed grass?

Contact Alethea at aletheapatton@sbcglobal.net for more information. A mask and costume making workshop will be held on April 28th from 2-5PM and 7-9PM at the new Bolinas Commons space.

Saturday, April 23, 7:00 AM to 5:00 PM

Sunday, April 24, 7:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Get Your Bird On

The Point Reyes Birding and Nature Festival is a must see birding event sponsored by the Environmental Action Committee of West Marin!

The Festival takes place at the height of spring migration within the Point Reyes National Seashore and surrounding areas featuring over 50 field events and indoor workshops.

Participants will see migrating seabirds, waterfowl, resident and migrant land birds, raptors, alcids, and owls. In addition to the unique birding opportunities, there are stunning wildflower displays, butterflies, dragonflies, migrating whales, elephant seals, sea lions, and Tule elk waiting to be discovered.

This is an unmatched birding experience!

WHAT YOU CAN DO FOR THE POLLINATORS . . .(from The Xerces Society for Invertebrate Protection)

"California is one of the most floristically diverse regions in the world, with a high number of endemic species and many unique plant communities such as coastal prairie and scrub, valley grasslands, chaparral, oak woodlands, and giant sequoia groves.

California's native plants support a corresponding diversity of pollinators, with an estimated 1,200 - 1,500 native bee species, including the imperiled Franklin's and western bumble bees, and over 200 butterfly species, including the iconic monarch.

As a group, these and other pollinators maintain healthy, productive plant communities, provide food that sustains wildlife, and play an essential role in crop production.

Providing wildflower-rich habitat is the most significant action you can take to support pollinators.

Adult bees, butterflies, and other pollinators require nectar as their primary food source, and female bees collect pollen as food for their offspring. Native plants, which are adapted to local soils and climates, are usually the best sources of nectar and pollen for native pollinators.

Incorporating native wildflowers, shrubs, and trees into any landscape promotes local biological diversity and provides shelter and food for a diversity of wildlife. Most natives require minimal irrigation, flourish without fertilizers, and are unlikely to become weedy."

Come learn more about native plants at

WILD A HOME: California Natives in the Garden and Beyond, April 29 - May 1, the BCC annual Art and Garden Show and an important fundraiser for the Community Center.

And, please consider joining us for the Magical Bus Tour (reservations 868-9330) to see the plants the pollinators love in the ground . . .

A VISIONARY AUDITORY JUBILEE WITH LOCAL MUSICIANS AND FARAWAY FRIENDS

PERFORMING LIVE AT THE GOSPEL FLAT FARMSTAND
SATURDAY APRIL 23RD 6:30PM

Dear Everyone,

Happy four twenty. I want you to know about this good music thing happening this Saturday 4/23 at the Gospel Flat Farm Stand starting at 6:30pm.

In honor of our friend Cole's livestock herding-themed art show currently on display, I'm going to try and harness my goat energy and share a few new trickster spirit songs. Also performing will be two excellent bands about whom you may or may not have heard, but will certainly enjoy:

YESWAY is a pair of wild ladies (and Bo Bo habitués) Kacey Johansing and Emily Ritz. They have this truly special thing going on with their syncopated guitar shimmer and ritualistic-feeling, dreamy heart-pulse music. Kacey plays the drums with her feet and it is awesome. I can't wait to hear their current electricity.

Also on the bill is talented band ITASCA, featuring some guitar-based, baroque acid-folk compositions of Kayla Cohen: "a heady slice of lysergic ladies of the canyon," says the music mag. Rumor has it they'll be joined by a solid pedal steel player: always a plus.

To be honest, I'm a bit intimidated to be sharing a bill with these talented performers but I'm rolling with a charming dream team of a back-up band: Eli Geller on keys, Alex Bleeker on bass and Charlie Callahan on drums plus special appearances by our beloved Gospel Flatters on harmonies, so that helps soothe my nerves.

We're going to try and play quietly but powerfully. Can we pull it off? Time will tell...

All in all, this looks to be an enjoyable night of mind-expanding and soul soothing music in my favorite place to sing. Bring a cushion, the chairs are uncomfortable.

I do hope you can come, my dear Hearsay-reading person; it would mean so much to see you there.

Again, that's:

'Farmsteads of the California Coast' a behind-the-scenes look at where the state's food is grown By Tanya Henry

Bolinas' Gospel Flat Farm, Hog Island Oyster Company in Marshall and Point Reyes Farmstead Cheese Company are three of the 12 producers featured in the newly released book, Farmsteads of the California Coast.

This intimate collection of farm stories, recipes and the people behind them is a true collaboration between local food writer Sarah Henry (no relation), publisher of Yellow Pear Press, Lisa McGuinness and photographer Erin Scott. The idea stemmed from a visit by McGuinness to Harley Farms Goat Dairy in Pescadero, which inspired her to learn more about the Golden State's coastal farmers.

"This book is really about celebrating farmers and bringing people back to the farm," explains Henry, who notes that our culture of celebrity worship focuses a great deal on chefs and restaurants and less on the folks who grow and produce our food.

Henry, a Berkeley-based writer, received a writing fellowship from the Mesa Refuge in Point Reyes Station, where she wrote most of the book. But much of her research took her on the road as far north as Philo to The Apple Farm, and down south to a citrus, avocado and fresh-cut flower operation in Carpinteria.

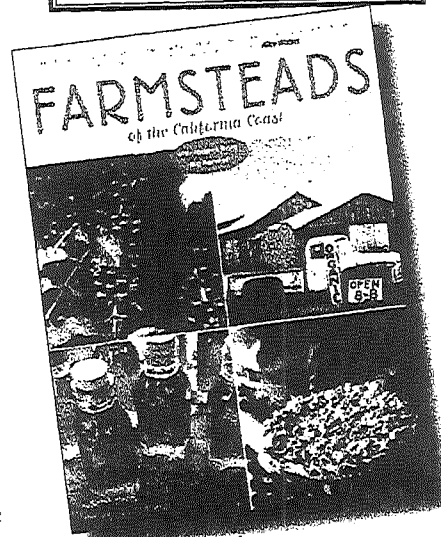

Having grown up on the Central Coast, and driven up and down Highway 101 hundreds of times, I thought I knew the area well. However, this thoughtful collection introduces us to some lesser-known farmers, who unlike their inland contemporaries, face different kinds of challenges, and offer products that thrive in coastal climates.

Farmsteads, by definition, include agricultural land, barns and other structures. They are also places where food producers make and sell value-added products like pickles, preserves or wine and cheese. The Giacomini family's Point Reyes Farmstead Cheese

Company cites this designation as a core value, which means that they have complete control over their raw ingredients—from the feeding and treatment of their cows, to the quality of milk used in their award-winning blue cheeses.

There is much to discover in this compact and beautifully photographed book. Organized geographically from north to south, each section begins with the name of the farm, its location, hours and tour availability. Recipes from each farmstead are also offered, and readers get a glimpse into the lives of these committed folks—mothers, daughters, fathers and sons, many of whom are second- and third-generation families producing some of the state's very best food. *

'Farmsteads of the California Coast' book launch party, Sunday, April 24, 2pm, Gospel Flat Farm, 140 Olema-Bolinas Rd., Bolinas; Order the book on amazon.com.

On Sunday, April 24 at Gospel Flat Farm, creators of the recently released book, 'Farmsteads of the California Coast' will talk about their inspiration, and visitors can enjoy produce and products cultivated by some of the featured farmer

The Iconoclast

Winemaker Sean Thackrey on terroir, home cooking and the wine of ancient mariners

BY JAMES KNIGHT

click to enlarge

Even if you can't find Sean Thackrey in Bolinas, you expect to find Sean Thackrey in Bolinas. He's been called eclectic, eccentric and idiosyncratic, and that's just in one magazine article. Add cryptic, enigmatic and even downright medieval, and you get the picture that the winemaker inhabits the outskirts of wine country proper—of course you'd be more likely to find such a character in a bohemian enclave like Bolinas.

Except that for many years, I could not find Sean Thackrey. Yes, he had a website, but even that was arcane: much of the text is in Latin, Italian and Middle French from the scholarly winemaker's personal library. An email went nowhere. I made a reconnaissance to Bolinas, poking around in the eucalyptus groves where the vintner was said to be ensconced with his barrels and his books, and making wine according to ancient recipes.

And it wasn't just me. As novelist and wine writer Jay McInerney recently told the Wine Writers Symposium at Meadowood, for all his world travels, finding Sean Thackrey in Bolinas was one of the most confounding tasks. Thackrey must be the last vintner in the world that doesn't send out regular press releases to tout his wines.

Then one day, there it was in my inbox: a press release from Thackrey & Company Fine Wine. What happened?

Whole Foods happened, for one. Thackrey's lowest priced and once slightly-less-than-impossible-to-attain wine, a red blend called Pleiades, got picked up by the behemoth grocer for its Northern California stores, which means that Pleiades must be on the shelf at all times. Thackrey ramped up production, hired a marketing assistant and an office manager, and, at their insistence, even became an enthusiastic participant on social media—which he used to call "antisocial media."

A photographer and art history dropout, Thackrey co-owned a San Francisco art gallery when he founded a winery at his Bolinas home in 1981. He first sold wine to his friends at Chez Panisse and garnered early acclaim when his first official release was called "the best Merlot ever made in California, blah blah blah," according to Thackrey, by a budding wine critic named Robert Parker.

When I finally meet Thackrey, he bounds out of his Bolinas barn—a newer location that holds extra barrels and a few old redwood fermenters, and which is just a little more artistically bent than your average barn—and begins talking a mile a minute about the origin of Pleiades. Clad in a jean jacket and sporting a gray mop coiffed by randomness, Thackrey's affable, academic quickness and vintage style are reminiscent of a radical campus professor with roots in the '60s.
