SHOCKER (NOT): ELECTION RESULTS AND COMMENTARY INSIDE!

Compassion

Have compassion for everyone you meet even if they don't want it. What seems conceit, bad manners, or cynicism is always a sign of things no ears have heard, no eyes have seen. You do not know what wars are going on down there where the spirit meets the bone.

Another Miata

by Stuart

Jerry convinced me to paint another one of his automobiles - another Mazda Miata to be exact.

I had already painted a Miata of Jerry's "Nibblelips." Maybe you've seen him driving around in a blue Miata with lips and eyes painted on it. That's "Nibblelips."

How Jerry convinced me to paint another Miata is another story. But there I was on a beautiful sunny day in the Plaza - squatting on a milk crate in front of a Japanese sports car with brush in hand.

Paul Mann walked over from the People's Store and stood silently watching me paint.

I struggled to stay focused on my painting while I waited for his comment. Everyone who watches makes a comment - it's part of the public painting experience.

"If I was a car painter," he commented, and then walked away.

What did he mean by that? I thought to myself as I stroked the Miata with a brush.

If Paul was a car painter? What kind of cars would he paint? And what designs would he paint? I knew Paul was into fancy cowboy shirts, and I pictured a car (well actually a pickup truck) painted like a fancy Western shirt with pearl snaps running down the sides.

"If I was a car painter." - the phrase kept echoing in my head.

And then it finally clicked.

Oh, "If I was a carpenter." And the song by Tim Hardin began to play in my head.

*If I was a carpenter and you were a lady would you marry me anyway
and have my baby.*

I began to appreciate Paul's humor and perspicacity, and as I continued to paint the Mazda I juggled the lyrics in my mind.

*If I was a car painter, and you were a Miata.
Would you let me paint your bod and create an Art Rod.*

Well, good citizens, another political transgression has occurred. A ratty group of radical Bolinas community members were stopped at the gate Monday, attempting to smuggle fruit into the political rally at Crissy Field. To what level has modern politics descended, that not just an individual, but an entire group of people will attempt to enjoy a piece of delicious California fruit while listening to a message of hope and "truth" from an inspiring system rocking candidate. The aspiration to enjoy a balanced intake of vitamins and minerals, nurturing one's ability to be present and "vibe" with the attendees and speakers at the event, was summarily nipped in the proverbial bud. Perhaps their error was they did not "bring enough for everybody". Perhaps the California Fruit Industry did not wish to be represented by a rag tag group of true patriots. Either way, fun was had by all and the vast array of confiscated fruit will be made into hooch, so all was not in vain...

Greetings Bolinas-Stinson School Community,

I am excited to share with you some of the experiences our students had this week. Our K-2 students spent some time at Audubon Canyon Ranch, exploring the redwoods. It is always great to see our kids out in nature, soaking in the brilliance that is so close to us. Thank you Cathy, Rebecca, Lauren, Kathy O., Karen and Marty for making this trip happen. Our 3rd-8th graders got a lesson in civics on Thursday as a result of a visit from a young woman who is running for US Congress—Representing Marin as part of California's 2nd District. Her name is Erin Shrode and she is a 25 year-old Mill Valley native who has a background in environmental activism. She is running for the congressional seat that is currently held by Jared Huffman. It was very engaging for our students to see a young, local woman with ambitions to be a federal law maker. I was also happy to see students in classrooms after her speech asking questions about how government is structured in this country. Thank you Willow for coordinating this visit. If you would like to know more about Erin Shrode, you can click here. It was a beautiful ceremony at Dominican University. Thank you Willow for all the tremendous experiences that you facilitate for your students. I also want to thank you all in advance for coming to tonight's 44th annual Art Show. I am sure it is going to be great. Huge thanks go out to Nuria, Kathy, Janis and Ron for the display of the amazing work they have guided our creative and talented students to produce this year.

Have a wonderful weekend. Jason Richardson, Principal Bolinas-Stinson School 415-868-1603

BLESSING WATER

2.5% of the water on Earth is freshwater. Of that freshwater, nearly 99% is frozen or under the ground.

The primary water source for Bolinas is a creek called Arroyo Honda.

It's only 3 1/2 miles long and provides an annualized average of about 1 gallon per second.

So, we have this one very small, and very beautiful, stream providing water to 593 households.

Very precious, this creek.

Come offer your gratitude with us on Sunday, June 19th, 9AM.

Meet in the Palomarin Field Station parking lot.

Hello,

I am trying to locate a young man who had been staying in Bolinas recently and who played banjo in Point Reyes Station at a Bernie Sanders voter registration drive there on April 23rd. He had expressed interest in being a guest on KWMR and I'd like to invite him to do so.

I do not know his name. He had long blond hair and facial hair, rides a bicycle and was headed to a birthday party in Bodega Bay.

Thanks very much,

Sanders Fans, I Get Your Pain

By Jay Carson

WE had lost. And I was as sure as I've been about anything else in my life that my party was making an enormous mistake. My candidate had won 23 primaries, about 1,900 delegates and, by one count, the popular vote. My candidate may have actually gotten more votes than the guy we Democrats were about to nominate, who was inexperienced and, I thought, unelectable.

Putting aside these macro issues, I was also deeply depressed. Anyone who has ever lost a serious presidential campaign can tell you it is an excruciating experience. I know what I'm talking about — I've lost three, including one in 2008 that was, we thought, un-losable: Hillary Clinton versus Barack Obama. I was her 31-year-old press secretary.

Losing is crushing: If you're a staff member you're immediately unemployed. And whether staff member or die-hard supporter, you're disappointed and angry — really, really angry. You have come to believe (because you must in order to work 18 to 20 hours a day for very little pay) that your candidate is a hero who will save the world, and that your opponent is a horrible person who will ruin it.

So once we lost the long primary fight, I wanted to shout my certainty that she was the right nominee and he was the wrong one to anyone who would listen. Night after night I sat down and wrote excoriating op-ed essays taking on Mr. Obama; the press and the party structure that helped elect him. I'd wake up in the morning and realize that what I had written sounded shrill, sometimes crazy and way too upset, and I'd tear it up and start over again.

The general election showed me how wrong I was. To my surprise, Mr. Obama won handily, taking states that Democrats hadn't won in generations. And though I haven't agreed with everything he's done, he's had one of the most successful presidencies in a very long time.

The stakes today are much higher. Unlike Senator John McCain, the Republican nominee in 2008, Donald J. Trump is dangerous. He believes in one thing and one thing only — Donald Trump. And make no mistake: Donald Trump can win. He has already proved that, and he's as much a threat in the general election as he was to his opponents in the primaries.

Senator Bernie Sanders's role in this campaign has been valuable — he has introduced important issues and excited millions of new voters. Mr. Sanders has earned the right to compete in the remaining primary contests and stay in until the convention — as Mrs. Clinton did in 2008. But rules are rules, and the math is the math. Senator Sanders is not going to be the Democratic nominee. There's staying in a race to cross the finish line with your head held high, and then there's participating in or condoning language and actions that will damage the nominee and help Mr. Trump.

So to all the Sanders staff members and supporters who are as hurt and dismayed as I was, who feel that their candidate is right and the opponent dead wrong, who want to keep fighting to the convention and beyond: I get it. I've been there (with Howard Dean and Bill Bradley as well). But please learn what I have learned and don't let your anger get the best of you. The consequences of doing anything that will help Donald Trump win are catastrophic.

I understand you may not love (or even like) Mrs. Clinton right now. Perhaps you can't imagine knocking on doors for her in the cold or donating your hard-earned money to finance her campaign. I'm doing both of those things, but I realize that you may not want to. I felt the same way about Mr. Obama in 2008. In the end I didn't work hard to get him elected (I really regret that now, by the way), but neither did I do or say anything that would harm his chances. I came to accept that he was, in fact, my party's nominee and might be the eventual president.

Recalling all those op-ed articles I discarded, I finally wrote one toned-down enough that I thought someone might publish it. I showed it to the one person whose blessing, if not praise, I needed: Hillary Clinton. Her response was clear and unequivocal. Do not send this to anyone. The race is over, she said. We fought our best fight, but we lost.

I know how difficult those lessons about losing can be to impart — and even more so to accept. But it is of the utmost importance that we all look beyond this intraparty contest to the one coming in November. I understand the anger about losing, and I know you may not love her (or even like her) yet. But Hillary Clinton is going to be the nominee of the Democratic Party. She is the only thing standing between us and President Trump. That should be enough motivation for all of us to put our differences behind us and focus on helping her win. □
