The Thirteen Curves

Many mornings, but especially Sunday, the early peace of Bolinas is shattered by visiting motorcycles.

They roar up Route 1, heading for the Thirteen Curves. Now, no one has ever counted exactly thirteen curves in this stretch of road. It comes out different every time you try it.

Lying in bed, awakened by the Sunday morning invasion, it seems to me that the motorcycles are trying to say the name of the Thirteen Curves but can't quite manage it: their incoherent roar is loud with annoyance.

Once they have gone, it is peaceful again. And the road thinks the Thirteen Curves quietly, to itself.

A BENEFIT FOR THE BOLINAS COMMUNITY CENTER

WHITE ELEPHANT SILENT AUCTION

There are many ways to participate in Labor Day, but the silent auction is one of those great win win opportunities. The Community Center wins when there are great items to sell, as that helps us support all the wonderful classes and events that happen at the BCC. The donor wins by passing on some artifact that need to be released back to the community. Something way-to-nice to throw away, but for whatever reason (too full of memories or not enough time for your own garage sale) something you don't want to sell.

The white elephant always reminds me of Ganesha, the Hindu deity that has an elephant head, and multiple arms. Ganesha is the remover of obstacles. So if your stuff is weighing you down, bring the beautiful, useful, desirable items to the Community Center. We'll do our best to find someone who will love it.

P.S. Your donations are tax deductible, we'll be happy to give you a receipt.

Balm for Gilead

Leslie Nuchow

Leslie has been coming to Bolinas for 20 years seeking renewal and inspiration. Some of the songs on this album were written on the Mesa. Her message — which blends nature, spirituality, and activism — is right at home here. The daughter of a labor leader and a feminist historian — music, protest, and healing have always been inseparable for her. She grew up understanding the power of having a voice, and what a voice!

Based in Brooklyn, NY, Leslie has toured widely, singing for Nelson Mandela and sharing the stage with Sarah McLachlan, Patti Smith, Sweet Honey in the Rock, the Indigo Girls and the Dixie Chicks, among others. Leslie's performance of songs from her new album, Balm for Gilead, offers a moving, poetic healing in these troubled times.

Find Bolinas, a hidden Marin haven where '60s idealism endures

Smiley's (Christopher Reynolds / Los Angeles Times)

Why: Bolinas, a lagoon-adjacent haven of 1,600 bohemian souls in an oft-overlooked corner of Marin County, has been operating incognito for decades. Locals steal road signs so that outsiders can't find their way in. Now that attitude might be softening, and the town, surrounded by hiking, surfing and kayaking opportunities, is fascinating.

What: About 50 years ago, hard-core Bolinas locals started stealing the town's highway sign and they never stopped. The goal, conceived in back-to-the-land idealism, was to build a nature-friendly community without the distractions and economic distortions of tourism. But as properties turn over and GPS renders signage moot, Bolinas seems to be evolving. Whether you're on the water or Wharf Road, it's a great place to think about hippie legacies and the nature of community at a time when Bay Area real estate is very nearly a blood sport.

Don't expect a tourist welcome center, but if you show up mellow and humble there's no reason you shouldn't drop in for a bite at the Coast Cafe; browse the tiny but well-appointed Bolinas Museum (open Fridays through Sundays only), or drink at Smiley's Schooner Saloon and Hotel, which goes back to the 19th century. In fact, Smiley's (which got new owners in 2015) offers live music four nights a week and rents out six rooms in back. I slept comfortably in one. On the street and in Smiley's, I was an obvious outsider with a camera around my neck, but everyone I met treated me well and Enzo Resta told me how his uncle may have been the first to take the town sign back in the day.

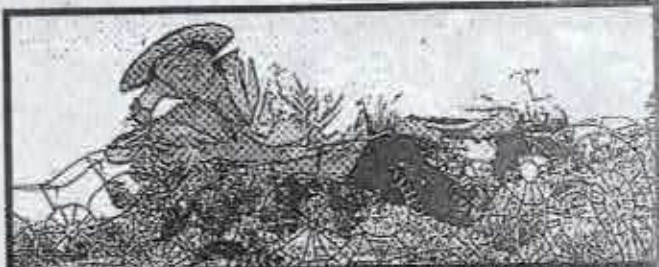

You'll see plenty of gray pony tails (and experience rotten cellphone service). And keep an eye out for BO Gas, the only nonprofit service station I've ever encountered. The rates are shockingly high ($4.66 a gallon in early August) but the money helps support the Bolinas Community Land Trust.

Welcome to Bolinas. (Christopher Reynolds / Los Angeles Times)

Where: Wharf Road, the commercial heart of town, is 25 miles northwest of San Francisco, just north of Stinson Beach, south of Point Reyes Station, 414 miles northwest of downtown L.A.

Info: There's no Bolinas Visitors Bureau — probably never will be. But there's a Marin Convention & Visitors Bureau to tell you what's nearby.

Brian, not Bryan

Misspelled the name of the sculptor on the cover of last Wednesday's Hearsay. Brian Kennedy, not Bryan Kennedy.

Brian Kennedy is a sculptor who works in metal. Brian did the fanciful gate at Amelia (and Joe's) house on Wharf Road.

Recently he's been working on a fence and gate at Bill (and Vera's) place on Dogwood. The fence is made from thin steel rod cut and welded together in circular patterns.

Miles Tune worked with Brian in constructing the fence/screen.

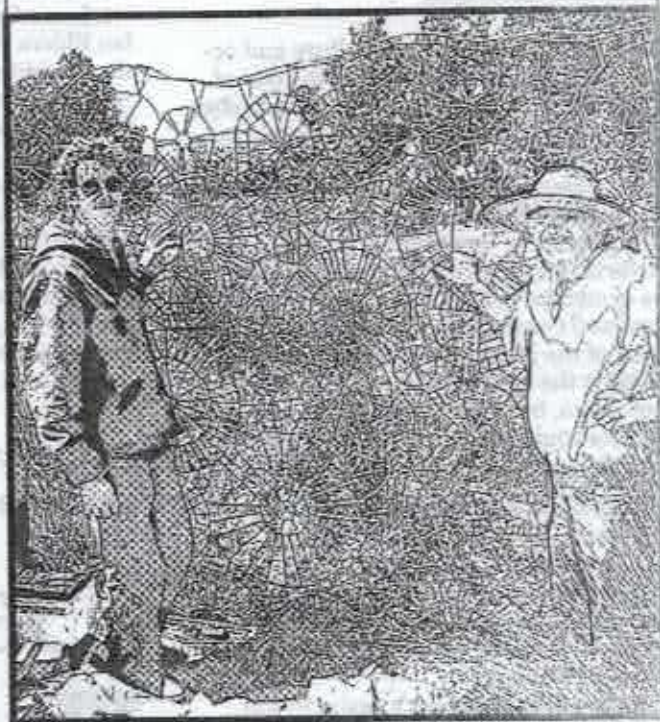

The beauty of the fence (besides the intricate pattern of steel) is its transparency. Ordinary wooden fences are opaque barriers.

One can witness this phenomena all over the Mesa as more privacy barriers are erected. These wooden walls ensure privacy but seal out the natural beauty.

Suddenly the wild wooly western Mesa becomes a rabbit warren of wooden walls.

Not to disparage anyone's need for privacy, but Brian and Miles' metal screen is a beautiful, artistic alternative to fortress america.

Bay Area's organic farms need new blood

Above: Workers hoe baby lettuce at Star Route Farms in Bolinas, California's oldest continuously operating organic farm. Below: Warren Weber has sold the farm he founded in 1974 to the University of San Francisco.

A growing concern: keeping farms alive

Bay Area's organic acreage imperiled as owners age

By Jonathan Kauffman

Advocates of Bay Area agriculture and organics have been waiting to learn the fate of Star Route Farms since owner Warren Weber put his 100-acre Bolinas farm up for sale in 2013.

When news broke this month that the University of San Francisco has purchased the property that was the state's first certified organic farm, many responded with enthusiasm. "It's a symbol of the importance of farming and of farmland conservation," said Jamison Watts, director of the Marin Agricultural Land Trust. Not only is the land going to remain a working organic farm, but the university plans to use it to educate students.

Yet if the sale is an omen of the future of farming in the Bay Area — and organic agriculture in particular — it's a hard one to read. The unconventional nature of the deal, rather than the institutional buyer that purchased the land, may signal a future that Bay Area food lovers can look toward.

The 76-year-old Weber's desire to sell the farm he founded in 1974 is a bellwether for an entire generation that has reached retirement age. According to the most recent U.S. Department of Agriculture census of agriculture, the average age of farmers in California in 2012 was 60. Almost a quarter were over 70. Only 4 percent were under age 34.

The Farm LASTS Project, which studies succession planning for farmers, has estimated that in the next 20 years, 70 percent of all privately owned farms and ranches in the United States will change hands. Although organic farmers are younger on average than conventional ones, California Certified Organic Farmers, the primary certification agency in the state, recently found that 200 of the 2,500 farms on its rolls had been certified organic for more than 20 years.

Many aging farmers must sell their farms to fund their retirement. Yet it's not as simple as putting a home or business on the market and decamping to Arizona. "It's selling your life's work," said Liya Schwartzman, who works on California FarmLink's Agrarian Elders Project. "The hope is that in the transition you're finding someone who will preserve the legacy of the farmland and also the farm business."

"The price of land is a huge obstacle," said filmmaker Deborah Koons Garcia, whose documentary "Agrarian Elders" about Weber and other organic pioneers will be released in 2018. "When they sell, farmers want to be able to retire, but the people coming in, no matter how young and enthusiastic — that's a lot of money to come up with."

For Alice Waters, was there life before Chez Panisse? Oh my, yes indeed.

It's a legacy that many beginning organic farmers would love to take on, particularly in the Bay Area, where farmers receive so much respect for their work and their food. Yet few can.

Dennis Dierks of Paradise Valley Produce has been farming in Bolinas as long as Weber has. He and his wife had no intention of moving off their property, which they purchased in 1972 as part of a cooperative, but their three oldest children weren't interested in the long workdays and strenuous labor. "I've been trying to find someone to train, but it was difficult," he said. Then, last season, his youngest daughter and her husband announced that they wanted in. "That was a major relief for me."

A Sage Looks Back

Food

The New York Times

By KIM SEVERSON

BERKELEY, CALIF. — Alice Waters took LSD only once. She spent most of the night floating near the ceiling, ignoring the molecules moving in the wood grain of the floorboards.

The drug had come from a French visitor who got it from Owsley Stanley, the sound man for the Grateful Dead, who was churning out top-quality acid in his kitchen here before it became illegal.

"His stuff was what Ken Kesey, the Beatles and Timothy Leary all took," Ms. Waters writes in her new memoir, "Coming to My Senses: The Making of a Counterculture Cook."

Of course it was the best. This is Alice Waters, for whom the provenance of everything she puts in her mouth is paramount.
