Nude posse traverses Bolinas

Bolinas residents and visitors, including kids at a surf camp, may have been surprised Tuesday afternoon to see a small group of nude young women parade through town on Wharf Road.

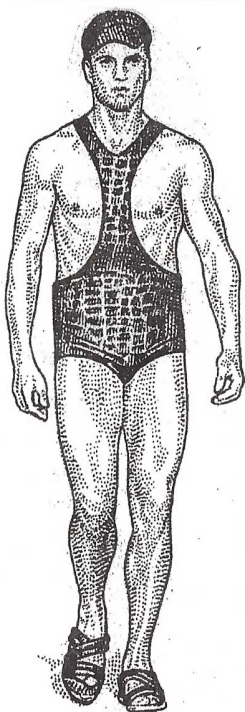

Witnesses said there were as many as five naked women, accompanied by a clothed male. One citizen placed a phone call complaining to the Marin County Sheriff's Office at 3:18 p.m., noting that the al fresco gallivanterers may have been European, or else drunk. Deputies were unable to locate them.

Other onlookers were less critical of the display. "Somebody called the Sheriff on those beautiful things?" asked Matt Lundy, who said he "keeps things from getting out of hand" at Smiley's Schooner Saloon, which the women passed.

"They were just going about their business, walking down the street, and went down to the beach," Mr. Lundy said. "They were fine as wine." Their allover tans suggested they were no strangers to the routine, he added.

By Robin Bradford

"I have bad reflexes. I was once run over by a car being pushed by two guys."
~ Woody Allen

MY REFLEXES worked well last week as Karen as I were returning to Bolinas after nine hours at the Moscone Center, traipsing around for cool new housewares items. Glad to finally be off our feet, we were enjoying the drive home and had just made the wide turn past The Pelican Inn when A Complete Idiot came speeding along in a red sports car right at us, taking his half of the road out of our lane. I pulled over as far as I could and laid on the horn, which didn't seem to deter his swerving along the wrong side of Highway One. Hearts fluttering, not in a good way, we sat for a moment and turned to watch as he nearly hit another car. Karen opined he was either drunk or English.

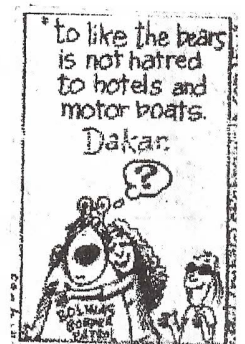

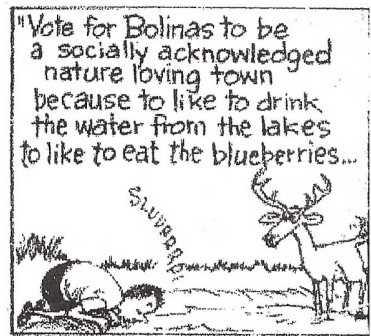

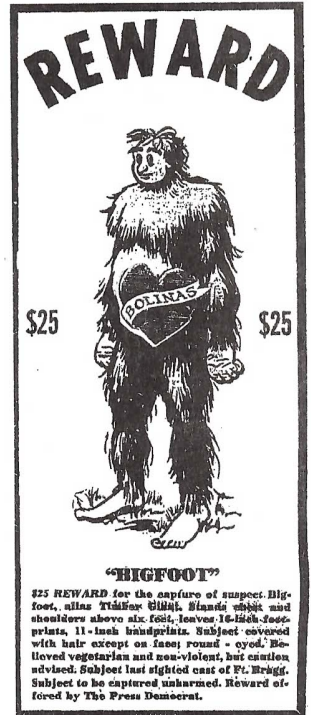

HOME MAINTENANCE. Two adorable little Do It Yourselfers came into the store with their grandfather, Herb Tully. They spent quite a bit of time selecting garden stakes, carefully considering each piece before deciding on their favorites. The picket fence of their playhouse needed some remedial attention and they seemed quite up to the task, although chances are, the two will probably get to play Job Foremen and Herb the Journeyman Carpenter.

FISH TALE. The 47th Annual Fishing Derby sponsored by the Bolinas Rod & Boat Club is coming up this weekend, the 10th, 11th and 12th! This is a great event with all kinds of prizes and fun for the beginning angler to the seasoned. It's a wonderful way to meet new people, enjoy the gorgeous weather, and (if you're lucky) dine on fresh salmon. All entrants receive a Josh Churchman-designed t-shirt and a door prize as part of the $20 entry fee.

GROUND HOG DAY. My husband Bill was the speaker for the Boat Club's August meeting's Marine Moments. He told of the crossing of the yacht Isobar from Berkeley to Falmouth, England when he was just a lad of 25. Isobar found itself in a hurricane in the North Atlantic and was flipped twice by rogue waves, the second time resulting in the dismasting of the vessel. The crew could hear British search planes but due to thick cloud cover, the planes couldn't spot them. Finally, after three days and down to one of their last flares, Isobar was rescued. The First Mate of a small, Dunkirk-bound Danish potato freighter happened to see the reflection of Isobar's flare in the window of the wheelhouse. Bill was selected (and eager) to leap from the deck of the 45-foot sailboat onto a cargo net the Danes threw over the side, and climbed his way up to their deck to find the clog-clad crew thrilled to be heroes in a true rescue at sea. Bill then watched from comparative luxury as the small vessel and his compatriots were towed into port through the nasty storm. Over the years, I've heard this tale at least 50 times and unlike other stories one must endure as a good spouse, it just never gets old. I can feel my blood pressure rising as he gets to the juicy bits, as if I don't know what the outcome of the story will be.

(ALMOST) INSTA-VEGGIES. My friend Peg, who lives in the far eastern outpost better known as Oakland, has an urban garden brimming with exotic edibles. She inspired me to finally "put in" raised beds and they were done in the blink of an eye. Four new galvanized livestock watering troughs now give shelter to lettuce, tomatoes, squash and other delectable starters, generously provided by organic farmer Dennis Dierks. Cruz Garcia and crew set up the troughs in a flat, sunny section of yard and fenced it off to keep our hooved, antlered friends from sampling the goodies. The little transplants are so enjoying their new digs, I really hate to tell them they will soon be starring in a major motion salad coming to our dining room table.

Press Play: This Old Earthquake's 'Gospel Flat'

By Paul Liberatore

This Old Earthquake

"Gospel Flat"

This artsy acoustic quartet from Bolinas continues to refine its distinctive brand of "West Marinicana" on this second album of sophisticated back porch music.

"Gospel Flat," recorded in the band's famously eccentric hometown, is just as spare, elegant and occasionally dark as 2009's "Portuguese Murder Ballads," the inspired debut from childhood friends Ethan Okamura and Steve Trivelpiece, both singer-songwriter-guitarists.

Original bassist Michael Burton is no longer with the band, replaced on this 11-track sophomore effort by Taylor Cutcomb on stand-up bass. With the addition of drummer Michael Pinkham, This Old Earthquake, named after a line in the Graham Parsons song "Sin City," now boasts an effective and, thankfully, unobtrusive rhythm section.

On "Gospel Flat," Okamura and Trivelpiece continue to explore subjects facing their baby boom generation. Sung in Trivelpiece's mellow baritone, "The Old Home" speaks to anyone who's tried to hold onto the family spread after the parents are gone and the family has moved on.

On songs like the existential "I'm Not Here," Okamura sings in a strange tenor whine that makes the song's poetic lyrics all the more compelling. And their odd harmonies on moody tunes like the bluesy "All Alone" are different and progressive enough to set this group apart from the average alternative folk group. Grateful

Dead lyricist Peter Monk wrote the lyrics to a pair of songs, "That's Where It Lives" and "Checkmate."

On "Gospel Flats," the title track, a ghostly trumpet sounds like it escaped from a Tom Waits session. Most people familiar with Bolinas know Gospel Flat as the Bolinas farm of artist-turned-organic grower Mickey Murch.

But the tune, called "Gospel Flats" on the CD, inexorable gentrification, mentioning Horseshoe Hill, where houses sell for millions of dollars. Okamura and Trivelpiece sing about vultures circling the sky above that expensive piece of real estate, ending with the sad-but-true line, "It's the only place left up there that money can't buy."

I'm not OK, you're not OK, and that's OK.

Elisabeth Kübler-Ross

With the baby due around the end of the year, Grace Slick and Paul Kantner moved out of 2400 Fulton Street around Thanksgiving into a place of their own in Bolinas, a remote spit of land on the ocean, about forty minutes north of San Francisco. From Kantner's top floor, octagonal bedroom in the Airplane house, they could see the tiny coastal enclave where they eventually found a rambling $100,000 ranch-style home with a swimming pool in the front yard, the Pacific Ocean in the backyard and a geodesic dome in the garden. Surrounded by redwood walls with video security cameras watching the front door, nursery and garage, Kantner and Slick retreated into this domestic sanctum, Slick decorating her new home, Kantner installing a sixteen-track studio in the basement. He even stopped using coke.
