BOLINAS ACTIVISTS RE-TAKE THE GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CITIZENS OF BOLINAS

(NEW AND OLD):

August 17, 2011

This summer has been full of local and beautiful bounty, please acknowledge it and its value to our life. Give it a toast of praise. There were numerous overcast days but nothing that could cast a shadow on the generosity of our community.

Many performance arts were at the Community Center, Bill Quist and Molly Maguire have also been in the churches, Coast Cafe performances on Thursday, Open Mikes at Bobolicious, Smiley's regular line up of good music. Amazing art openings and a couple of life drawing classes. Jerry Bo Jeste is working on a theater piece for the fall. Sage, Molly Maguire, Emma Lee Project and Beso Negro, and This Old Earthquake have been putting out recordings and performing prolifically. Sofi Rox has been hosting Coasties. Maitreya brought us some great reggae once again. Local bands Just Friends, Bobo Tempo, The Mushrooms have been here too (and others I'm forgetting to mention).

Tom D'Onofrio and his daughters made sure that the bumper crop of babies got a hero's welcome. The Lion's Club gave us another great 4th of July and everyone gave their all to make sure it was full of praise for the freedom we give each other (and Anna made sure that we took that praise all the way to the ocean) and Mickey and his family gave our streets a 24 carrot flag. Kathy Bustamante, Natalie Peppers, and the new bike path organizers gave the children more possibilities for healthy safe fun.

We lost some amazing souls, and the outpouring of love and gratitude for how they had blessed us in living was loud and strong.

Two great folks Randi Arnold and Lia Sabbatini took on the job of running the Bolinas Community Center and, if we can get the financial support (everyones), we will

On The Cusp ~ Improvisation of Presence

A full-on performance of Action Theater will happen at The Dance Palace on Sunday 21 August at 7:30 PM. Artists steeped in this form of pure physical theater improvisation will come to West Marin from all over the place, enacting their quest for the present moment and its infinite possibility. Unlike your customary improv, Action Theater has no shtick: just breath, embodiment, and eagerness to take a deep dive into spontaneous magic. Aloha,

There will a Surfer's Paddle Out Memorial for David Gleason on Sunday September 4 on the Bolinas Beach at the end of Brighton Road. All are invited whether one paddles out or just celebrates being on the beach as David did. The gathering time is 10:00 AM with the Paddle Out beginning at 11:00 AM. There will a potluck following the Paddle Out until 2 PM when the group will migrate to the soccer field for Sunday Soccer. Those wishing to attend are asked to bring either flowers, a potluck dish or a fondness for David. Anyone wishing more information or wanting to help in any way, may call Edward Pohlman -2727

West Marin Review seeks art, prose, poetry for its Volume 4 to be published in 2012. Submission deadline is September 1 this year. Important submission details are at <http://westmarinreview.org/submissions.html>.

Email me at cory.griff@gmail.com, or visit me in the People's Store. I'll visit your favorite area of Bolinas and write a brief piece vaguely related to the experience. This week I didn't get to any of the places I wanted to, so here are some general musings on the topic of our surroundings.

Our environments are secretive in part because we conspire to keep their secrets from ourselves. We make walls to hide ourselves from the world and then make walls to hide the walls in. Similarly, we use familiarity to progressively obscure our surroundings. As we become accustomed to the presence of nearby things we no longer perceive them. Soon we cannot see our streets or workplaces. There is no end to the phenomenon. At times my entire town has vanished into blindness for a week before I became aware that I was not aware.

Some things appear to reveal hidden aspects to us in the night but are really different things than they were in the day. I once saw the moon's trail on the ocean lead to a black whirlpool, and I have never been to that place again though I have walked on the same sands.

soon be able to have better sound and lighting for our wealth of live performances through the tireless efforts of the BCC board and volunteers.

Serita Lewis has spearheaded feeding families that are welcoming new babies or struggling with health problems and June McAdams has led the volunteers who keep the spirit house tended.

The B'RightOn Plaza has kept us in Books, Art, uniguities and even high grade dog food, the lumber yard celebrated new ownership. Kalaidoscope, Chameleon, Buzz's, Judith's Herbals and the Free Box continued to operate in a tough economy for the sake of local Small Box commerce. Samantha Sachs launched Daffodil Darling Decorative Painting, her interior design company as an alternative to the mundane.

We now have a second local surf shop operating on Wharf and getting us in the water. There presence means more commuter surfers might actually end up shopping where they play and supporting our local business.

Some generous homeowners have made it possible for local families to rent here instead of move away. Shout outs to good landlords are always important and less vacant homes mean we have more community health.

Amazing art has been shared with us all summer long and a couple of life drawing classes have been playing forward the legacy of Arthur Okamura. The Bolinas Museum, Bolinas Gallery, Bobolicious and Not A Surf Shop have been hosting great art and Peter Lee had a show at Toby's.

The local fishermen are continuing to preserve our heritage of self sufficiency. Gillyflower Nursery kept us in succulents, plus local goat and bee products, two great organic food stands Murch's and Star Route have kept us eating local and healthy. Bobolicious, Bolinas Market, Max's Burritos, The Coast Cafe, and numerous caterers have been making great food to keep us fed on the run. The Bolinas Nursery has kept adding to our garden beauty, the Resource Recovery has kept local gardens loved up with local compost. Local contractors continue to maintain our unique Ar(t)chitecture.

A slough of people (families and individuals) too numerous to mention have kept our public places clean and sacred and our hungry fed in ways that should not be taken for granted....tamales, food shares, and loving kindness.

3 local newspapers continue to keep us in dialogue and our locally created, run, and staffed Fire Department, BPUD, Clinic, and Schools have continued to press on to assure we have a viable sustainable infrastructure. Hours and hours of volunteer time and grueling hours of labor go into our health, safety, and education.

We live in a thriving community, we live in a lovely town, and we have each other to thank for that. I wanted to take a moment to acknowledge just some of our prosperity. Bring your gratitude down to the Community Center on Labor Day and PLAY IT FORWARD and continue to give thanks to each other in every way you can. Sometimes we think we've lost something along the way, let us remember what it means and what it takes to be BOLINAS Bolinas.

The new environmentalists

Sustainability? That's so 20th century, says Bolinas institute

by Peter Seidman

Environmental sustainability is not enough. That is a key element in a philosophy that seeks to move beyond maintaining a natural-world status quo, where environmental degradation merely is halted, says Erin O'Reilly, program director at the Regenerative Design Institute in West Marin. "We feel a regenerative system, something that feeds itself like nature does is the way we need to go. Sustainability is like [saying] we can stay at this same level. That's not good enough."

The Regenerative Design Institute is a nexus for the latest permutation of what in the 1960s was called the environmental movement. Actually, the institute is on a branch of a family tree that stretches back to President Theodore Roosevelt, a preservationist whose most important and lasting environmental contribution was the creation of the system of national forests, parks, monuments and other ecological milestones. Although principally a preservationist, Roosevelt acknowledged that humans live in the natural world and interact with nature. He believed that people should be conscious of environmental consequences.

"In utilizing and considering the natural resources of the nation," Roosevelt said in an address in Jamestown, Virginia, in 1907, "the one characteristic more essential than any other is foresight.... The conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life."

Given the changes caused by human activity in the years since that speech, Roosevelt's admonition has more import now than it did when he first spoke those words. Problems caused by carbon emissions, greenhouse gases, sea-level rise and climate change are all current consequences Roosevelt could hardly have envisioned as the result of a technological march into the future. Or maybe he was prescient. In 1907, in an address to the Deep Waterway Convention, he said that unless the nation could successfully meet the challenge of solving the problems related to conservation of natural resources, "it will avail us little to solve all [problems]."

Although Roosevelt is known as a conservationist, his motivation centered on preserving resources. The conservation movement came along after Roosevelt, essentially taking his environmental baton. Skip to Rachel Carson and work such as the 1962 publication Silent Spring, which warned about environmental contamination, and a new dawn of the environmental movement unfolds. Carson, who was born the same year Roosevelt gave those talks, often is called the mother of

A long haired Asian girl
In a long thin black silk dress
On the dusty harbor road
Bent low, bare arms outstretched
To let her camera see

The group of little stones
She favored on the old blue wooden wall.
Pink flowers grew random in the sand.
Her feet, in little sandals, bare.
The salty wind lifted up her hair.

She walked on with her friend. Her thin dress
Swayed. The harbor boats bobbed green
And blue. The fog made colors all seem true
The way rest and stillness sometimes do.
Overhead, a heron flew.

People at the sea wall
Watched the surfers in their wet suits
Shiny blackness, dress and undress
With their boards, they'd come and go.
They looked like sharks' fins in the bay.

They say the halibut boats are in.
They'll be fish and chips in the cafe.
We'll have some lunch, but first the beach.
We'd come to lie in sand and sleep
In this place that was once our home.

We wanted a long sleep soothed by the waves.
We've been away a very long time.
But the tide was high. The day was grey.
The wide sea heaved and crashed
Way up in long and dirty rolls of foam.

We felt the spray
Drank in the endless sound
And smelled the lovely deep fry smell
And for the moment, were at home.
Bolinas.

The Miwoks said it was a healing place.
You came to heal and then must go
Unless you became a healer, too.
Or else, well, like, you know
They make a twirling motion at the ear.

The place for us was freedom nothing less.
For me it was the sun and moon and sea.
And music. There was music on that day.
And in the sand, the grey-haired, barefoot hippy dancers
Twirled in a seventies ecstasy of song.

Drawing Crowds: Touring the Tiny Enigmatic Berg of Bolinas

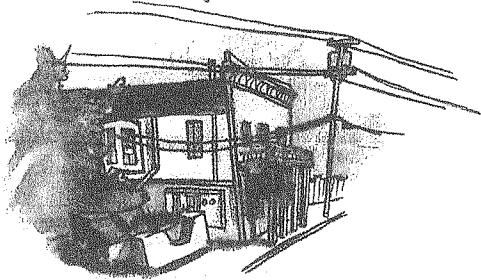

Quirky locals, moneyed artists and zen surfers populate a secluded beachside community

By Jay Sacher (jsacher@bolinas-stinson.org) on May 31, 2011 - 4:53 p.m. PDT

This week Drawing Crowds went to a wedding in Bolinas, a tiny wind-swept community in Marin with a reputation for being clannish. Graphic reviewer Jay Sacher found the quirky place to be both welcoming and guarded at the same time.

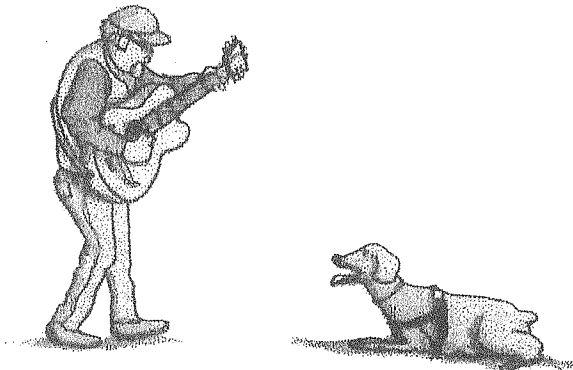

The only thing I'd heard about Bolinas, the hippy-dippy soul-surfer community nestled along the lagoon north of Stinson Beach, is that the locals are not fond of outsiders. Whether that's true or not I cannot say. In town this past weekend for a friend's wedding, I encountered a few stares, but most often cheerful smiles and accommodating friendliness. I witnessed none of the oft-discussed stories of misplaced street signs (to confuse out-of-towners) and while I did take extra care to tread softly through the town, Bolinas seemed content enough to have me there.

SMILEY'S

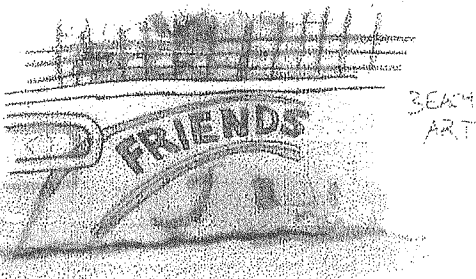

At Smiley's Schooner Saloon along Bolinas' main strip, bar was tended by a chipper young woman and her pork-pie hatted compatriot, a guy named Donkey. Saturday afternoon found the tavern packed with a busload full of drunken post-college maniacs: a man in pajama pants quite vocally distressed by the Giants loss to the Brewers, an elegant blonde playing pool with a couple in matching Giants jerseys, a drunken girl with a triangle painted on her forehead, and this guy, sweaty and glassy-eyed, engaging in a string of animated conversations with the smokers on Smiley's front porch.

We walked the loop through town and down to the wind-swept beach. Surfer mom and dads waxed their longboards, their children threw globs of muddy sand at one another.

A DOG SERENADE ON THE BEACH

The beach is sprinkled with street art. Graffiti of birds, aliens, art-forward slogans and stencils of Barbarella brandishing a surfboard.

The wedding was two miles from town, in a sprawling hippy mansion whose original proprietress, a hard-nosed patron of the arts, had passed away last year. Her son, who lives on the property, recently began renting it out for events. After the wedding, I leafed through the proprietresses' scrapbooks, left out for guests to peruse. With frank detail, she chronicles her life of privilege and her rebellion from that privilege that led her from the beatnik dens of the West Village to the town of Bolinas and her one-of-a-kind home. It seemed a fitting portrait of this strange little community-part playground for moneyed artists, part zen surfer tramp paradise, part welcoming, part secluded. It's a town that's shy about itself, but hardly humble--it's San Francisco in miniature.
